New airport terminal offers impressive welcome to Butte visitors

By Robin Jordan

About 300 people were on hand for the grand opening of the new terminal building at the Bert Mooney Airport last Thursday, Feb. 15 and all seemed to agree that the spacious new facility will give visitors a great first impression of Butte.

Butte's mining heritage is reflected in the entryway under a towering headframe, as well as mining timbering on the walls and ticket and car rental counters. The entrance of the passenger screening area is surrounded by a huge, patterned grate, designed to resemble a miner's cage and mineral specimens and other artifacts of early-day mining are displayed in cases along one of the front walls.

The building features other unexpected reminders of Butte's heritage in the stained-glass wall of a conference room and portal windows on the north wall that recall area churches. Walls of mosaic-patterned glass and art-deco columns with lighting sconces give a nod to Butte's historic architecture but remain in keeping with the building's clean, modern look. High, soaring ceilings and numerous skylights give the terminal a feeling of spaciousness and light.

Beyond the passenger screening gate is a capacious waiting area with plenty of seating and glass walls that offer breathtaking views of the town, the East Ridge and other mountain ranges. Once the old terminal is torn down, visitors will also have a view of the Highlands to the south.

Lead architect of the new terminal was Paul Powers, a Butte native who has been involved in design, renovation and expansion of 38 other airport terminals throughout the U.S.

The terminal has two concession and bar areas, one inside the area for passengers who have already been screened, which will feature items like bagels and fruits in the morning and soups and sandwiches later in the day. There are also two sets of restrooms. In the old build-

BUTTE SPORTS

No school rivalry is worth missing out on a pasty

The Saturday morning kids league has helped launch the basketball careers of many future Maroons and Bulldogs for the last quarter of a century.

The league lets boys and girls just have fun playing the game. There's no coaches and no traveling. The referees make sure every player is included in the games.

Saturday mornings at the KC are way better than your traveling team, where you cut players who aren't good enough at the age of 11. The league doesn't care if the parents have little money, and it doesn't ask for your membership because most players come from families that don't belong to the KC.

Oh, and the league is completely free of charge for everybody.

The KC doesn't ask your religious affiliation before letting your child play, and it doesn't make you show your Butte Central student identification card.

The KC also doesn't for those when they make sure you don't have to pay an arm and a leg to have a reception after your grandfather's funeral.

Yet, the KC is a casualty of the knuckleheadery of the old Bulldog-Maroon feud.

For whatever reason, there are still many who harbor a great deal of resentment for their former high school rival.

That bitterness is, for the most part, nonexistent for people who went to high school in the 1990s or later. It seems particularly strong in those who went to high school from the late 1970s through the mid-1980s.

This silly resentment certainly works both ways.

But even in this age of the false equivalency, you can't say that it is 50-50. It is, at best, 70-30 with the hard feelings coming from former Bulldogs, mostly with their age ranging from 48 to 60.

That doesn't make any sense because Butte High, for the most part, dominated the rivalry in that time.

The Bulldogs won the last 18 Butte High-Butte Central football games from 1974 through 1991, though some of those games in the late 70s and early 80s were pretty good games.

The 1981 game, which saw the Bulldogs win an 18-12 overtime battle, was particularly hostile.

Some Butte High players allegedly destroyed the interior of one of the cars belonging to one BC player, and a couple of Bulldogs were burned when lighting the Central bonfire early.

In Pat Kearney's book "Butte's Big Game" about the Butte High-Butte Central football rivalry, one player called the rivalry that year an "all out civil war."

From 1973 through 1989, Butte High's boys' basketball team won 18 of the 21 games between the two schools.

Of course, the rivalry was much more fun than the record might suggest. Still, if anything, it should be the Maroons who harbor ill will toward the Bulldogs all these years later instead of the other way around.

Until 2004, Red Sox fans hated the Yankees way more than Yankees fans hated the Red Sox.

When Butte High's boys' basketball teams played in the Class AA state championship games in 2004 and 2007, the arenas were filled with Butte fans. Not just Butte High fans, but Butte fans.

The amount of BC families that were in the crowd for both those games were incredible. They were cheering for the Bulldogs, too.

When Butte Central played for the Class A state title at the Butte Civic Center in 2005, I had multiple Butte High fans go out of their way at Tiny's Tavern in Billings, where I was covering Butte High at state, tell me they were cheering for Columbia Falls.

Of course, they said it with the look-around-before-saying-it shame of telling a racist joke.

Can you imagine, cheering against your neighbor's kids because of the color of their uniform? If that isn't a telltale sign that you need you need to see a mental health professional, then I don't know what is.

The players from both schools get along pretty well today. The football teams actually work out with each other, running skelly drills in the offseason.

Sure, there is the occasional fight, but it isn't because the color of their jerseys.

In 2003, a Butte Central player punched out a Butte High player after the boys' basketball game because the Butte High player had it coming. He was running his mouth the whole game.

The Maroon flattened the Bulldog in the hallway outside the locker rooms in the Butte Civic Center.

The blackened-eyed Bulldog's teammates thought he deserved it, too. That was obvious by the way the just stepped over him and shrugged on their way to the locker room.

If that punch had been thrown 20 years earlier--no matter the justification--there would have been a riot.

Luckily, times have changed. Sadly, too many didn't change with those times.

I went to both Butte Central and Butte High. In my two years at each school, I found a lot of things to dislike in each school.

I found even more things to like, though there was never a single day in school that could ever compete with a Saturday.

Without question, there was nothing I loved or hated about either school that would ever make me miss out on a pasty with friends anywhere.

Did you know that there are people in our town who refuse to step foot into the Knights of Columbus Hall?

It's true. They won't even go there for a funeral reception.

If a close friend loses a family member and the post-funeral gathering is held at the KC, there are really people in our town who will skip out on the pasties and beer with friends in need of friendship.

That's because the KC is the "Taj Mahal" of Butte Central.

Really, that is the reason. You can't even make this stuff up.

Grown men who have been out of high school for more than 30 years really will not help a family remember a loved one because of the Butte High-Butte Central rivalry.

These people make Robin Williams' character on the movie "The Best of Times" seem well adjusted.

First of all, the KC is one of the best sports museums in the state. If nothing else, it's worth going there for that.

If you played any sport in the Mining City, there's a pretty good chance there's a photo of your team hanging somewhere on the walls of the KC.

Yes, the odds are even better if you played for a Catholic school, but that is because the Knights of Columbus is a Catholic fraternal service organization.

The photos, though, are all inclusive, and the man most responsible for the photos cheered on his sons as they played for Butte High.

Aside from holding periodic fundraising breakfasts for Butte people in need and providing free lunch the needy, the KC also puts on the best youth basketball program in ing, passengers who had gone through security had to come back out to use the bathrooms and then be rescreened.

The new terminal cost $10.5 million to build, mostly with federal funds. Butte-Silver Bow commissioners approved $1 million in local funding from hard-rock mining trust funds for the project.

Airport renovations actually began in 2011 with milling and repaving of runways. In 2015, work began on reconfiguration and expansion of the parking lot and installation of new sidewalks. Construction of the terminal was begun in August 2016.

Equipment and materials were scheduled to be moved from the old building earlier this week and operations from the new terminal should begin with the first flight on Wednesday, Feb. 21.

Big week for major projects

By Robin Jordan

It's not every week that a major community project is unveiled to the public, but last week, Butte celebrated the opening of two—a new passenger terminal at the Bert Mooney Airport and the three-level parking garage on Park Street.

Both of these are big deals for Butte's economic development and required shrewd deals that leveraged public funds so that the community got big value for the buck. Kudos are in order to Butte's economic development team for their skill and knowledge in bringing these deals to fruition.

The $7.5 million parking garage was financed by bonding against the new URA district. Creation of that district was made possible in part by the construction of the new $23 million NorthWestern Energy headquarters building at the corner of Park and Main Streets. The county agreed to build the parking structure as part of its deal with NorthWestern to keep its headquarters in Butte.

The bulk of the funding for the $10.5 million airport passenger terminal came from federal dollars, part of a $13.2 million renovation of the airport that included milling and repaving runways and expansion, re-design and repaving of the parking lot. In order to secure federal funding, Butte-Silver Bow had to provide a $1 million match, and in February 2016, Butte-Silver Bow commissioners voted unanimously to grant that amount from the Hardrock Mining Trust Fund.

We're impressed that the architects of these two major projects designed them to be modern and functional and still incorporated features that recall historic Butte architecture and give them a uniquely Butte character. One can see it in the brickwork and purplish glass tiles of the parking garage as well as the mining timbers, stained glass and Art Deco columns in the airport terminal.

We're pleased that another major Butte project that will be unveiled this spring, the new waterpark at Stodden Park, will also incorporate features that pay tribute to Butte's history and blend these "Butte" elements into a modern facility. With the beautiful Spirit of Columbia Gardens Carousel, central courtyard and pavilion and new playgrounds, as well as redesigned parking lot, a second entrance and new archway, the park will have all the modern recreational amenities as well as recalling the elegance of the old Columbia Gardens.

All of these projects will contribute to the attractiveness and livability of Butte and should go a long way to improving the image our community projects both to tourists and to those looking to relocate a business here or move here to live. The new airport terminal, with its expansive views of the town and surrounding mountain ranges and its comfortable, spacious feel, provides a great welcome to travelers and will make a terrific first impression. Other improvements on that end of town, like the repaved Harrison Avenue and the addition of the Clarion Copper King Inn and Convention Center help to continue that good impression. Having the parking garage should help ensure ample, convenient parking for those who want to shop, dine, stay and do business in the Uptown district. The new waterpark and other amenities at Stodden Park give folks more reasons to stay and play in the Mining City.

Despite the snowy weather, it's been a great week for all of us in Butte.

'An Arms Bonanza'

By George Waring

"An arms bonanza," is how William Hartung, the director of the Arms and Security Project at the Center for International Policy describes this year's Washington outlook.

Hartung's annual analysis of the health of the military-industrial complex began:

"Major weapons contractors like Boeing, Raytheon, and Lockheed Martin cashed in "bigly" in Trump's first year in office. They raked in tens of billions of dollars in Pentagon contracts, while posting sharp stock price increases and healthy profits driven by the continuation and expansion of Washington's post-9/11 wars." He then described 2017's bonanza as "likely to be no more than a down payment on even better days to come for the MIC."

Hartung credits Trump's early 2017 demand for an increase of $54 billion in Pentagon funding for this year for setting off a bipartisan stampede. Trump had demanded an annual increase in annual military spending equal to the combined sum of the military budgets of our allies, Germany, France, the United Kingdom, and Japan. He notes that Paul Ryan's House defense team immediately outbid Trump by demanding an $85 billion increase.

Last week I noted that the budget-busting National Defense Authorization Act for 2018 depends on Congress freeing itself from the agreement to have parity in defense and domestic spending, imposed by the Budget Control Act of 2011. I guess that's a done deal because Hartung predicts that defense spending "is likely to go far higher this year than the staggering figure Trump requested last spring."

For Hartung, having both Trump and Congress backing bigger and better defense spending is "only the beginning of the good news for the big weapons companies." He's observed Washington long enough to predict that this year's budget work, the Fiscal Year 2019 budget, will determine the real increase in defense funding. The reason? Incumbents seeking re-election will have to prove their worth to defense contractors early to fund their TV ads in November. He writes, "Dangling potential infusions of Pentagon funds in swing states and swing districts is a tried and true way to influence voters in tight races and so will tempt candidates in both parties."

How does "an arms bonanza" fit into Trump's campaign promise of job creation? "If Trump has an actual jobs program," Hartung writes, "it mainly seems to involve pumping more money into the Pentagon and increasing overseas arms sales."

Of course, Hartung continues, such a program "is one of the least effective ways to create new jobs." But that matters little. Pouring money into the defense industry is "an easy and popular way for a president to give himself the look of stimulating economic activity, especially in an era of steep tax cuts favoring the plutocratic class and attacks on domestic spending."

Forget Trump's campaign promise of spending $1 trillion to rebuild the nation's infrastructure. Instead, Hartung reports that "the Pentagon is already on course to spend $6 trillion to $7 trillion of your taxes over the next decade." Trump is going to surpass even Obama in military spending.

As far as Republican campaign promises to "rebuild our hollowed-out military," what they claim happens under any Democratic President, Hartung says, forget it. He writes, "A surprising percentage of the huge increases in tax dollars Ryan and McConnell have promised won't even go into the military equivalent of infrastructure" Using Defense Department expenditures during Obama's last year as his guide, Hartung predicts that "up to half of such funds are likely to go directly into the coffers of defense contractors rather than to the troops or to basic military tasks like training and maintenance."

Let's remember ancient history. In 2014, Robert W. McChesney's "Blowing the Roof Off the Twenty-First Century" revealed how military spending is hidden. OMB reported in 2007 that DOD spending was only $530 billion. However, Energy Department spending on nuclear weaponry was $553 billion. The Stockholm Peace Research Institute arrived at its total based on some kind of compromise. Its researchers credited the US with military spending of $883 billion in 2007, an amount that equaled 45% of global military spending.

McChesney added ignored items such as consumption of fixed capital and under-funding the future liability for military and civilian retiree benefits, and found another $100 billion. Plus, miscellaneous hidden items. He ended up with a total of about $1 trillion for US military spending.

He concluded, "If global military spending was just $1.3 trillion in 2007, we're unrivaled."

After practicing law in private practice for almost 20 years, on Tuesday, February 13, 2018 local attorney Cindy Walker filed to join the race for the District Court Judge seat being vacated by the Honorable Brad Newman. Walker explained that "ever since taking Dan Sullivan's Teens and the Law class in high school and getting to watch a trial at the Butte courthouse, I've wanted to serve the community of Butte as a judge." She stated, "litigants expend considerable time, money, and emotion getting their cases through the court system. District court judges are charged with resolving disputes and issuing timely decisions based on the individual circumstances of each case and applicable law, which will be a priority for me, if elected." Charmaine Trudeau will serve as Treasurer for Cindy Walker's campaign.

Cindy attended Greeley and Emerson grade schools, East Junior High School, and graduated from Butte High School in 1986. She earned a bachelor's degree in political science with an emphasis in public administration from the University of Montana in 1990. After spending six years working as an office gofer, receptionist, secretary, and paralegal with a law firm in Missoula, she was able to pursue her lifelong dream of becoming an attorney.

She graduated from the University of Montana School of Law with honors in 1999. During law school, Cindy was an editor of the Montana Law Review and served as a teaching assistant for the law school's legal research and writing program. While in law school, she also interned for the United States Department of Justice in Washington, D.C., in the General Litigation Section of the Environment and Natural Resources Division. Following graduation from law school, Cindy clerked for the Montana Supreme Court for a year. After her clerkship, Cindy went into private practice in Missoula. While in Missoula, she served on the Board of Directors of the Boys and Girls Club and served as an officer of the Western Montana Bar Association.

Cindy returned home to Butte in 2006 and practices law at Poore, Roth & Robinson, P.C.

Her areas of practice involve all aspects of civil litigation and labor and employment matters. She also counsels businesses and governmental entities on employment and labor matters, contracts, and statutory and regulatory compliance. Cindy has tried a number of jury trials in state and federal courts in Montana, and has also presented oral argument before the Montana Supreme Court and the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals. Since returning home to Butte, Cindy has also had the privilege of providing pro bono legal services to individuals and non-profit organizations in Butte.

What's Cooking

Edna's Banana Bread

By Debbie Sorensen

When I was growing up, I couldn't understand why my mother would keep those miserable black bananas on the shelf in the porch. However, when something was just right according to her calculations, it was time for them to hit the bowl and end up in the batter for her tasty banana bread.

When she served up slices of her banana confection, those who partook of the treat usually sang her praises and went for a second piece. Mom was always quick to give the credit to the "well-aged" bananas with the vinegar added to the milk.

Now, when the bananas get the best of me and end up black in the blue fruit bowl, I peel them and slip them into a freezer bag. When I've got what I need to bake a double batch of banana bread, I thaw the special package out and start fixing and mixing. As the loaves bake and the aroma fills the kitchen, I smile and look forward to serving up special food and memories.

Edna's Banana Bread

Is a Managed Account Right for You?

As an investor, you'll face many decisions over the years. How much should you invest? Where should you put your money? When is it time to sell some investments and use the proceeds to buy others? Some people enjoy making these choices themselves – but not everyone. Consequently, the type of investor you are will influence your thinking about whether to open a managed account.

As its name suggests, a managed account – sometimes known as an "advisory" account – essentially is a portfolio of stocks, bonds and other investments chosen by a professional investment manager who makes the buy and sell decisions. Typically, each managed account has an investment objective based on your goals, and you may have some voice in investment choices – for example, you may be able to request that the manager avoid certain investments. Or, you might still work with a personal financial advisor who can help you identify and quantify your goals, define your risk tolerance, and track changes in your family situation – and who can then use this information to help guide the investment manager's choices.

Beyond this basic structure, managed accounts can vary greatly in terms of administration, reporting, fees and minimum balance.

So, assuming you meet the requirements for a managed account, should you consider one? There's really no one right answer for everyone. But three factors to consider are cost, control and confidence.

Cost – Different managed accounts may have different payment arrangements. However, it's common for a money manager to be paid based on a percentage of assets under management. So, if your manager's fee is 1% and your portfolio contains $100,000, the manager earns $1,000 per year, but if the value of your portfolio rises to $200,000, the manager earns $2,000. Because the manager has a personal stake in the portfolio's success, this arrangement could work to your advantage. Be aware, though, that other fees may be associated with your account.

Control – With any managed account, you will give up some, or perhaps all, of your power to make buy-and-sell decisions. If you have built a large portfolio, and you're busy with work and family, you may like the idea of delegating these decisions.

And, as mentioned above, you can still oversee the "big picture" by either working through a financial advisor or, at the least, having your goals, risk tolerance and investment preferences dictate a money manager's decisions. But you will have to decide for yourself how comfortable you are in ceding control of your portfolio's day-to-day transactions.

Confidence – It's essential that you feel confident in a managed account's ability to help you meet your goals. And the various elements of a managed account may well give you that assurance. For example, some managed accounts include automatic rebalancing of assets, which, among other things, can help you achieve tax efficiency. Other features of a managed account – such as the experience and track record of the manager – also may bolster your confidence.

Ultimately, you'll need to weigh all factors before deciding whether a managed account is right for you. In any case, it's an option worth considering.

It's Not a Diet

The weight-loss industry in the United States is a multi-billion dollar industry, confirming the fact that Americans would rather spend money to tell them what to eat, or for a magic pill, than to try to slim down on their own. If it were just a matter of money, then all those wanting to lose weight and who put out the money would be slim, which is not the case.

One of the many problems is the body image we have in this country. In our evidence-based lifestyle classes we learn that it takes a five to seven percent weight loss to improve our health and reduce our chances of getting Diabetes and other major diseases. We all have our own body shapes that we were born with and genetics determines our tendency to be heavier or thinner. In other words, we do not all have to strive to have the same figure or to look like a model. Success is more likely if health is the goal.

Part of the diet mentality is the idea that we can be very restrictive for a period of time, lose the weight we want to lose, and then go back to the way we were eating prior to the diet. One of the most popular diet trends is cutting out food groups. This is not sustainable and it is also not good for our health. Some diets alternate severe calorie restrictive days with days where the calories are more normal. These diets are very hard to stick to but those that do lose weight. They just don't keep it off because it is not sustainable.

We can all start our days off right by eating breakfast within an hour of getting out of bed in the morning. Eating smaller, more frequent meals during the day can also be effective. However, eating large, more frequent meals is not, so it is important the meals are kept small. A snack can be a protein combined with a complex carb. Some examples:

apples and nut butter, whole grain crackers and cheese, vegetables with hummus and fresh fruit with yogurt. For meals, use a smaller (9-inch) plate and divide it into 4 parts: one part lean meat, chicken, fish, or other protein, one part starchy food like brown rice, potato or corn and the other half salad, fruits and vegetables.

Being aware of what we eat is another important aspect of a healthier food plan. Slowly replacing less-nutritious and more-processed foods with whole foods that are nutrition dense is the step after awareness. There are foods, like cheese that are calorie dense but nutritious with

Carousel Corner

Larry Hoffman

Last week the final section of floor was stained, around the footprint of the circular carousel floor, and the floor support sections put in place. These are held up by rods coming down from the sweeps that radiate out above from the center pole. The last step of preparing those rods was to remove nuts from the lower end, a real project because of years of rust and damage, and slip on spiral decorative brass tubing.

The next work is laying down a plywood sub-floor over the steel support wedges, made years ago by the Anaconda Job Corps. Then the entire perimeter is wrapped in a steel edge strap that will form the outer edge of laminate flooring over the plywood.

Every time we add more to the rotating part of the mechanism there is a moment of suspense before we see if the new electric drive is within limits. No problem so far, but a lot of weight left to go - the floor, more decorative panels on the sweeps, horse supports, horses, and finally riders. Altogether there are tons of load to be started in motion and whirled around.

The subject of this article has appeared in this column quite a few times in the past twenty years, but its importance never seems to get old. Especially now, when talk of the flu dominates the news, and our fear of getting sicker than our bodies can handle dominates our thoughts, it's a good time to update and reprint this information. If you aren't up to date on natural cold and flu remedies, (even Dr. Oz is mentioning this remedy), or even if you are, it's never a bad idea to know what natural product is of use when we do come down with a runny nose, aches and chills, sore throats, or just a sickly lack of energy. Throughout the years, whenever I am exposed to seasonal illness or feel that I "might be coming down with something", my go-to remedy always contains elderberry.

Ancient folklore has given the plant Elder, and its berries, almost magical properties. In the British Isles, elder bushes/trees are said to be the home of one of the most powerful of all faeries, Hylde-Moer, and the English referred to elder as "nature's medicine chest". Although elderberry's curative abilities are perhaps not magical, they are truly impressive and effective.

According to many modern virologists, this little plant may be one of the best combatants of the flu virus known. The modern Elder plant possesses medicinal properties that act as a blood cleanser, diuretic, anti-inflammatory agent and a mild laxative. It has been used successfully for such conditions as bronchitis, common cold and influenza symptoms, coughs and fevers, neuralgia and sciatica, as well as rheumatism and skin disorders.

Two of the compounds found in elder protect the liver against free-radical damage. Other compounds have anti-microbial qualities. Elderberry works as a simple cleanser and antioxidant that often can stop health problems before they get a chance to start.

Containing substances called Sambucus nigra agglutinins (SNAs), elderberry locks receptor sites on certain strains of flu viruses, keeping them from infecting our cells.

Often flu strains send out enzyme spikes to dissolve the walls of healthy cells, permitting access to the cells by the virus. Compounds in elderberry thwart this process, keeping the cells from infection from at least eight strains of human influenza virus.

This powerhouse of the herb kingdom contains essential fatty acids Omega 3, 6, and 9, sterols (powerful immune system boosters), vitamin C, and flavonoids like rutin and quercetin, as well as other naturally occurring chemicals that activate a healthy immune system.

In clinical trials, elderberry syrup was tested against 10 different influenza viruses in vitro and it immobilized and prevented many strains of the viruses from penetrating healthy cells and replicating. When tested on subjects with the flu, participants who received elderberry syrup were relieved of symptoms on average four days earlier than the group without supplementation.

A study in Israel determined that elderberry extract activates a healthy immune system by increasing cytokine production. Cytokines, hormone-like proteins secreted by our cells, regulate the immune response, so they not only reduce symptoms, but also stimulate antibody protection in the body.

Elderberry has been proven effective against 8 strains of influenza, a stronger performance than any vaccine for combating viruses. Also studied for use in treatment of HIV, Epstein-Barr and herpes viruses, elderberry is a gentle herb that can be used safely for long periods, as it maintains a constant vigilance against any invading germ without harming the body.

In Europe, elderberry is considered an herb of longevity and is used as a "resistance enhancing" tonic. For all these reasons, elderberry is a safe and smart choice for the elderly and children, or anyone with special care needs.

Available in teas, lozenges, syrups and extracts, as well as pill form, elderberry is an effective and invaluable ally during cold and flu season. Whether you find elderberry in combination with Echinacea, zinc, vitamin C, goldenseal, boneset, lomatium, grapefruit seed extract or other immune system boosters, elderberry packs a punch against colds and flu. However you take it, just make sure some derivative of elderberry is in your medicine cabinet this season, and all year round.

calcium and protein. Other foods like chips and soda, and sugary drinks, are loaded with calories but offer little to no nutrition.

We may all want the quick fix with fast results that diets and diet supplements offer. If we look at the bigger picture, we can lose weight and keep it off in the long run by being patient and improving our diets one step at a time. It is not often that folks that are dieting talk about how good they feel. Eating healthier does make us feel better and improve our health. Try making some small changes this week and decide if you can make more the next.

The panorama surrounding the Giving tree is taking on color as Jim Goebel and Suzanne Masters team up to bring the scene to life.

We have as many as 8 electricians that donate their time and talents to connect the maze of wiring. It is a slow process, but the results are more evident every week.

The Butte Plaza Mall, managed by Alana Ferko, has stored our materials and provided room for our carvers and office for many years. It gives her mixed feelings to see things be moved out. Some of her old friends are leaving, but coming to life where they belong in the new building.

As I've mentioned before there are a million details to be done before we are ready for riders, and we are working hard to get them done. Once we get the entrance ceiling stuccoed we will be able to install the beautiful front door.

We are looking for that someone to hire, get involved in the planning, and manage the operation after it opens. This is a fun opportunity for someone with imagination and management capability. So far, we have had no applications. If we don't have a manager to run the place after all this work, it will only be able to operate on the availability of volunteers and you've seen how slow that has made construction!

Contributions to the project may be made by PayPal from our Facebook page, www.facebook.com/pages/Spirit-of-Columbia-Gardens-Carousel, or the website, <http://www.buttecarousel.com/>, by mail to P.O. If you have any comments or suggestions, or would like to volunteer to help, please let us know! Call the office at 494-7775, or stop by the site. We are not there all the time, but as much as we can!

Florida school shooting part of troubling trend

By Paul Vang

"There's been a shooting at the Margaret Leary School." That was the heartbreaking shock to the entire Butte community on what had been a beautiful spring morning in April 1994. It was one of those events that sear your memory. Like the news of the assassination of President John F. Kennedy, it was a moment that you remember where you were and who you were with when you got the news.

In that event, it emerged that a disturbed child, from a wildly dysfunctional family, took his father's handgun to school that day and during recess shot and killed another child.

The news of the shooting made front-page headlines across the nation.

Fast forwarding to the present, the nation is reeling from another school shooting, this time on Valentine's Day, with a 19-year old high school dropout shooting up an elementary school in Parkland, Florida, killing 17 people and injuring more, some perhaps mortally.

It's the worst school shooting since the Sandy Hook massacre, when another mentally disturbed young man killed 21 people, including his mother. A frightening thought is that our 1994 school shooting would barely be noticed outside of Montana, considering the ongoing flood of shootings.

Unbelievably, this was the 18th incident involving a firearm in a school zone in the first 45 days of 2018. The adults and children killed in Florida bring the total of deaths due to school shootings since Sandy Hook to 138 (Washington Post). Ironically, The National Council for Home Safety and Security rated Parkland, Florida as the safest city in Florida.

Crime rates, including violent crime, in the United States have declined since the early 1990s but mass shootings have increased. Since Sandy Hook, in 1912, more than 1,600 mass shootings have occurred, and the five worst mass shootings in our history have taken place in the last decade. There were 346 mass shootings in 2017 alone. At that, mass shootings represent just 2 percent of all gun fatalities annually.

A common thread through this bloody review of mass shootings is the use of so-called assault rifles. Statistically, according to the Washington Post report, assault weapons constitute 2 percent of all firearms in the U.S., but have been used in 27 percent of mass shootings from 1999 to 2013.

In shootings in Newtown, San Bernardino, Orlando, Las Vegas, Sutherland Springs, and last week in Parkland, the shooters used AR-15 semiautomatic rifles. In the Las Vegas mass shooting last fall, the gunman had legally modified several of his AR-15's to become virtual machine guns.

Sadly, as killings continue, nothing happens.

Sure, some politicians offer "Thoughts and prayers, yada, yada yada." Or "Now is not the time, blah, blah, blah."

Washington Post columnist Paul Waldman, who writes The Plum Line column, writes there is one thing we, the people, can do to do something about gun violence, both mass shootings and the 30 or more other gun deaths that occur daily. It's simple, he says, "Don't vote for Republicans."

He explains, "I'm sorry if you find that too partisan...But the fact is that one of our two parties has in recent years has decided that it will stop any and all efforts to address gun violence, no matter how reasonable they are and no matter how much of the public favors something like universal background checks that is supported by more than 90 percent of Americans."

It is a fact that about half the senators and representatives in Congress get campaign contributions from the National Rifle Association. All but a tiny handful are Republicans. Waldman asks, "Isn't the NRA the real problem? No, the NRA is made up of loathsome ghouls, but it's also an interest group like any other. Whatever power the NRA has flows through elected officials, nearly all of whom are Republicans who have made a choice to ally themselves with the organization."

Incidentally, the only immediate reaction to the Parkland school tragedy from the NRA was to remove a tweet from their Twitter site, re-tweeting an ad from the Kimber firearms company promoting buying guns for sweethearts on Valentine's Day.

Paul Vang's book, "Sweeter than Candy, A Hunter's Journal" is available at Books & Books, Cavanaugh's County Celtic, The Bookstore in Dillon, or online at <http://writingoutdoors.com>.

are sponsoring a public forum on Superfund
Friday, Feb. 23 at 7 p.m. in the Montana Tech Library auditorium. The forum is being organized by Montana Campus Compact VISTA Service member Daniel Hogan. The forum will focus on Superfund issues in our community, including discussion surrounding the recent EPA announcement that an agreement in principle has been reached for the Butte Priority Soils Operable Unit (BPSOU). The panel will also discuss the timeline for the Berkeley Pit water level, and the adequacy of the Horseshoe Bend water treatment plant. In keeping with KBMF's educational mission, this forum seeks to foster dialogue about the Superfund process that has been taking place in Butte for more than 30 years. A panel of Montana Tech students, professors and community members will participate in a moderated discussion. The forum will also be broadcast live on KBMF 102.5FM in Butte, and online at www.butteamericaradio.org.
