Gold Hill Lutheran Church celebrates 125th anniversary

By Robin Jordan

This month, members of Butte's Gold Hill Lutheran Church will celebrate the 125th anniversary of the church's founding in a small building on Alaska and Copper Streets back in 1892.

Church members Peggy Graving and Jeanette Quist have been compiling a history of Gold Hill for the celebration, poring through church records, meeting minutes, church bulletins and photographs. Graving said most of the earliest church records were written in Norwegian, which added to the difficulty of the task. While Graving focused on writing about the "straight" history of the church—the "who, what and when"—which has been published in the church's monthly newsletter, "The Nugget," Quist looked for human-interest stories, which have been published in weekly church bulletins.

The church's beginnings are credited to Peder Pedersen Skorgan, a scholarly shoemaker who immigrated to the United States in 1883. (Graving explained that Pedersen dropped the "Skorgan," which refers to a place of origin, after coming to this country.) After becoming a United States citizen and setting up a shoe shop in Butte, Pedersen and others began organizing a group of Christian Norwegians. In 1890, this group purchased a building on Broadway for $100 that had housed the International Order of Good Templars. They also purchased a lot on the corner of Copper and Alaska for $1,700. Using contributions from the group and the city of Butte, along with some personal loans, the building was moved from Broadway to Alaska and Copper for $9,357 in April of 1890. Although Pedersen was not an ordained minister, he became the church's first pastor and the congregation began holding services in their new church in 1892.

The trustees and congregation named the church the First Scandinavian Independent Evangelical Church. The building had three levels: a basement or first floor, which housed the Pedersen family, the chapel on the second floor and a meeting hall on the third floor. According to early financial records, the congregation needed more than the average weekly offering of four or five dollars to pay the church's mortgage and daily expenses, so the church rented out the meeting hall to a number of groups, including the school board, the mortgage company, the Builder's Exchange, the Foresters Union, the Temperance Union, the Tailors Union, the Shoemakers Union, the Protective Union, the Scandinavian Brotherhood, the Daughters of the St. George and the Ladies Aid Society.

The current Gold Hill Lutheran Church was built in 1937-1939 motivated by the urgings of Elling Halvorson, a Norwegian contractor from Minneapolis who on April 15, 1937. Halvorson donated used bricks from the buildings torn down to make room for the high school for the high school. Even so, the budget for the project was tight, so Halvorson ordered concrete from the Ideal Cement Company and told them he was going to kneel down in prayer until they sent him a carload of concrete free, which they did. The church was built moved to Butte with his family to build Butte High School. Members pledged contributions at a special meeting and a $5,000 loan was secured from the Home Mission Fund. The land at 934 Placer Street was donated by the Anaconda Company, which reserved the mineral rights. A groundbreaking ceremony was held

About the time Dallas Cowboys fans had completely forgotten Tony Romo's name last season, a sideline video of Dak Prescott went viral.

The video showed the Cowboys rookie quarterback missing the trash can with a toss of a paper cup. A champion of the working man, Prescott got off the bench, picked up the cup and put it in the trash.

In most places, such a gesture would have gone unnoticed. In Cowboys Nation, it was really big news.

Millions of Cowboys fans shared the video on social media, using the video as proof that a team long known for shady characters had a truly good guy playing quarterback.

Prescott clearly was brought up the right way, raised by parents who taught him to care for the little people, like the janitor who has to pick up trash after the game.

Yes, the Cowboys have a quarterback with character. Not only is Dak Prescott the second coming of Roger Staubach, he is also the kind of guy every dad would love to see his daughter bring home.

I cannot help but think of that Prescott praise as I listen to those same Cowboys fans try to shift the blame after the NFL suspended running back Ezekiel Elliott six games because the league believes he likely – and on multiple occasions – hit, choked or pushed a woman.

I cannot help but think of Dak taking care of the trash on video when I read about a Texas judge granting Elliott an injunction that likely means that, despite the suspension, the running back will play the entire 2017 season.

Less than a year ago, this fan base ready to proclaim its quarterback was a deity who could bring sight to a blind man while walking on water because he picked up crumpled-up paper cup. Now it is looking the other way on domestic violence because Elliott averages 5.1 yards per carry.

As Buck Murdock might say, hypocrisy can be pretty hypocritical sometimes.

I know what you're thinking. "He isn't going to bash the Cowboys and their fans again, is he?"

Well, yes I am.

Back when Matt Vincent and I continuously slammed Montana Power CEO Bob Gannon for selling out his hometown and draining the nest eggs of so many former employees, my buddy Tim told me we were beating a dead horse.

Oh, he admired our persistence and he agreed with the sentiment of us mentioning Bob for about 50 straight columns, but he said it was time to let it go.

Well, some dead horses just need to be beaten, I said. Domestic violence is without a doubt one of those dead horses, even more so than Mr. Gannon.

Yes, Elliott was not charged for the alleged incidents by the police of Columbus, Ohio, where Elliott was a star running back for Ohio State.

The NFL, though, investigated the matter for more than a year, and NFL commissioner Roger Goodell decided that it was obvious that Elliott hit a woman on more than one occasion.

Sure, the NFL cannot seem to do anything right when it investigates matter of discipline. Remember, Ray Rice initially got two games for knocking his fiancé out with a left hook.

The commissioner, who says he only saw the video of the couple getting in and out of the elevator when he doled out the two games to Rice, apparently thought the running back knocked his fiancé out with a magical kiss inside the elevator before another video showed the whole story.

That Elliott got six games for what the in-depth NFL investigation uncovered should be an outrage, but not for the reasons Cowboys fans – and fantasy football geeks – argue.

It is an outrage because it is only six games.

Read up on the case just a little bit, and then tell me if you would want Elliott to date your daughter.

The important thing to remember in this case is that Elliott is accused of hitting, pushing and choking a woman up against a wall, and the NFL investigators sincerely believe he is guilty.

Sure, the alleged victim, who lied to the police on at least one occasion, isn't the most reliable witness ever. That is oftentimes the case in domestic violence matters. That is part of the reason why so many wife beaters get away with it for so long.

Fans and media members seem to be focusing on the wrong thing in this case, and so many other cases involving athletes accused of domestic violence.

They worry about the process instead of the crime, and the Elliott case is not the only instance.

In the lead up to the Floyd Mayweather vs. Conor McGregor fight, hardly anybody mentioned the multiple occasions when Mayweather was charged with domestic violence. Writers rarely mentioned it. TV talking heads said little or nothing. Sports radio hosts were silent.

They also were largely mute about bigoted comments made by McGregor.

Instead of addressing the real story, they hyped up the biggest joke of a fight since Rocky Balboa took on Thunder Lips in an exhibition, and both fighters with highly questionable character walked away with millions.

When writers and broadcasters covering such athletes avoid the big issue, they are not only turning a blind eye to battered women. They are condoning their beatings.

While the NFL's suspensions do not seem to be deterring the crime, public shaming could sure do the trick. At least it is worth a shot.

It would not stop domestic violence if media members constantly beat that dead horse, but it might make some of the younger athletes think twice about their behavior. Maybe our children will take notice of severe consequences for such despicable acts.

The same goes for the fans. Can you really cheer for a man who thinks it is OK to push around somebody's daughter?

Can you look your daughter or granddaughter in the eye while wearing your No. 21 Cowboy's jersey?

Will you encourage your son to be a fan of such a man?

Would you be OK if it was your baby girl who was the unreliable witness with bruises to prove she was abused by the running back?

Those are the questions we should be asking ourselves and each other as Elliott takes the field for all 16 games this season.

Any answer other than an emphatic "no" is pure trash that cannot be so easily thrown away.

Motorcyclists rev their engines for upcoming race at Pipestone

Engines will roar at the Bureau of Land Management's Pipestone recreation area Sept. 16-17 during a competitive motorcycle race.

Earlier this year, the BLM Butte Field Office issued a 10-year Special Recreation Permit to 5th Gear Productions, based in Three Forks, to conduct the annual race at the Pipestone Off-Highway Vehicle Recreation Area, about 13 miles east of Butte.

Each day, from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., riders will participate in timed races with different classes and a staggered start pattern. The maximum number of race participants has been set at 350. Saturday race classes will consist of youth and novice riders. Sunday race classes will include novice, intermediate and advanced riders. A registration tent will be erected at the 4-Corners staging area, along with a minimal amount of vending.

The race will wind its way through 15-20 miles of designated ATV and motorcycle routes in the BLM-managed portions of the Pipestone OHV Area. During race periods, 5th Gear Productions has been issued exclusive use of these routes (primarily adjacent to the 4-Corners staging area).

"Closing these trails to other users during race periods helps eliminate dangerous encounters between racers and members of the general public," said Brad Colin, Outdoor Recreation Planner for the Butte Field Office.

Maps of the closure area will be posted at major Pipestone OHV Area access points now through the end of the race period. Spectators who wish to observe the race will be required to remain in designated areas.

Members of the general public will still have access to the lower Pipestone trailhead, located just off I-90 at Exit #241. Routes in the eastern portion of the area (including the route to Ringing Rocks) that are not associated with the event will remain open to the general public. Race routes will be marked and/or staffed. Primitive camping before, during and after the event will also be allowed.

Major road crossings will be heavily staffed. In extreme cases, riders may be required to walk their machines across road crossings. The race course will be marked on September 15 with flagging, caution tape, arrows, and sponsor banners. All race-associated markings will be removed on September 18.

An ambulance and corresponding emergency medical personnel will be required to remain on-site at all times during race periods. Racing will be stopped immediately if the on-site ambulance is required to leave the location and will not resume until a replacement ambulance arrives, said Colin.

For more information about the permit for the race, call Brad Colin at (406) 533-7638

Shenanigans involved in Main Street lane changes

By Robin Jordan

This week, Butte-Silver Bow unveiled plans to repaint lanes on Main Street again.

You might recall that two years ago, the city decided to change the traffic configuration on that street from four lanes to two. A dedicated bike lane was added on the northbound side, the southbound lane was changed to a "sharrow" lane—one to be shared by bicycles and cars—and a center turning lane was added.

Barely a year after the painting was completed, the city had to repaint the lines, which had been washed away by the winter snows and slush. Again, the job was considered temporary because the city fathers wanted the public to have sufficient time to see if the configuration worked well.

Chief Executive Dave Palmer was never a fan of the Main Street configuration and now the council of commissioners is considering changing it to eliminate the center turn lane from Mercury to Front Streets and to widen the driving lanes.

We tend to agree with Palmer that the center turn lane is unnecessary. We've heard plenty of grumbling from residents about it. The turn arrows seem to point aimlessly into seldom-used side streets, or even into businesses located in the middle of the block. In some blocks, such as the 500 block of south Main, the driving lanes seem precariously narrowed by the center lane.

Some of us are still unconvinced that Main Street needs a northbound bicycle lane. The street is steep for all but the most experienced riders and we have seen very little use of the lane since it was added. We understand the city's desire to be "bike friendly," though, so there's little chance we'll change anyone's mind about the need for it.

So, as far as it has been presented on paper, the plan looks pretty good. However, we've heard there are more shenanigans brewing in connection with the lane changes.

Word is that Dave Schultz, head of Public Works, believes that without the center turn lane traffic will be backed up with cars waiting to make left turns at Mercury, Platinum and Second Streets, all streets with four-way traffic light signals. He believes the answer is to replace the signals at these intersections with four-way stop signs.

We've had all summer to see how well the four-way stop signs work at Second and Main Streets. This spring, the signal light on the northwest corner was removed mysteriously, the remaining lights were changed to flash red and temporary stop signs were added. We later learned that the signal was removed as part of work to fix the storm drain and replace the sidewalk at the corner.

We haven't seen any wrecks at the intersection, but we've seen plenty of near-misses and heard some screeching tires. Second Street jogs at an angle at this intersection, causing visibility problems. The street is a major route for big trucks and we still have huge concerns for pedestrians trying to cross there without the traffic light signal.

We have to wonder why the Public Works department doesn't consider putting left-turn lanes at the three intersections and leaving the signals in place. We've been told that traffic studies show that we don't have enough traffic on the street to warrant keeping these signals and we know that some in the local government would like to have them removed. However, if we don't have that much traffic, would traffic really back up with those wanting to turn left if we go to a straight two-lane configuration?

We suspect that Public Works is trying to use the new road configuration as an excuse to remove the traffic lights at these intersections, a move that won't be popular with many residents. It certainly won't be popular with pedestrians wanting to cross Main Street.

The POTUS on Tax Cuts By George Waring

The day after POTUS and his stiletto-heeled wife visited Texas, merchandising a white hat ($40 on his reelection campaign website), and exclaiming, "What a crowd! what a turnout!" he flew to Springfield, Missouri, to announce his discovery of where Route 66 started! He promptly read from a teleprompter what he had forgotten to utter in devastated Texas, that he was concerned for folks who had lost everything, and for their rescuers. He required a teleprompter, and a speech writer, to indicate how human beings clothed in petty authority might minimally express concern for suffering. Thus, was empathy squeezed from our Narcissist-in-Chief. Then he focused immediately on what the Republican Party and his administration exist for ---to cut taxes for the Trump family and our ruling corporate oligarchy.

As MSNBC's Lawrence O'Donnell noted, POTUS read his teleprompter speech before an audience of manufacturing workers at a plant making industrial fans. And his message was simple ---cutting the rate of the corporate income tax from 35% to 15% will create jobs for American workers. However, he said nothing about his tax plan's actual effect on their families' taxes. He assumed the role of corporate leader, reading a speech written for the pleasure of fellow corporate leaders.

O'Donnell also noted that POTUS specifically asked his audience to vote out incumbent Democratic Senator Clair McCaskill, if she refused to support his proposed tax cuts. Tax payers paid for this official POTUS visit, not his campaign. His partisan speech was written by a federal employee in the White House who is covered by the Hatch Act, which prohibits politicking while on official duty.

However, for a Narcissist who knows he stands above the law, what should we expect? No Republican in Congress or at the Department of Justice dares whisper a word.

Steve Wamhoff, the Institute for Taxation and Economic Policy's senior federal tax policy expert, responded to the Springfield performance by noting that the only proposals thus far released by this administration would actually cut taxes for companies moving their investments offshore and provide huge tax reductions to the richest 1 percent of taxpayers. That is, the administration's promises of a tax reform that provides "more jobs and higher wages for America" and "tax relief for middle-class families" are blatant lies.

Wamhoff noted that "the only formal Trump tax proposal so far is on a single, double-spaced page of tax reform principles that the administration released in April." Using those principles and statements by such administration officials as Treasury Secretary Steve Mnuchin and White House economist Gary Cohn, Wamhoff's Institute has estimated that Trump's tax-cutting agenda would cost $4.8 trillion over a decade and more than 61 percent of the benefits would go to the richest 1 percent of households. The bottom 60 percent of American households would receive just 10 percent of the tax cuts at an average of $400 in 2018.

According to Wamhoff, nearly half of the tax cuts would go to millionaires. That means one-half of the richest one percent of tax payers, folks with incomes greater than $1 million next year, would receive 48.8 percent of the tax cuts. Their reduction would average $218,000 in 2018.

How do the POTUS proposals benefit companies shifting investments offshore? Wamhoff explains they include a "territorial" tax system, which means that offshore profits of American corporations would be exempt from U.S. taxes. "Far from helping American workers," writes Wamhoff, "a territorial tax system would allow U.S. corporations to reap tax savings any time they move investments to a country with a lower tax rate, or (more commonly) use accounting gimmicks to make their profits ap-

Chokecherry Jelly

By Debbie Sorensen

The first year I taught Home Economics was in Miles City, Montana. I had a number of parents offer garden produce and fruit for use in my ninth grade Junior High class that fall. Those gifts were happily accepted and worked into the lesson plans for a cooking unit.

Making preserves was something I had learned early on in my kitchen career. That activity always resulted in great satisfaction when the finished product sat in glistening rows of jars gracing the cupboard. What better way to start a school year than with homemade jelly to send home with the students? Or so I naively thought.

With 24 students divided between six kitchen Units, the anticipation was high on jelly making day. The excitement rose with the fragrant steam from the merrily bubbling kettles. Soon, the activity took on a fever pitch in Unit #1. Unit #2 followed all too soon with screeches of distress. Before I could dash to the end of the room, the other Units fell like dominoes! The bubbling jelly was oozing over the tops of all the kettles, under the burners and into the stove top. Yikes!

What I had completely neglected to take into consideration, was the fact that there were no kettles large enough in the department to allow the jelly to come to a full rolling boil. That full rolling boil was an important step in the whole process for the proper consistency of a good jelly.

Frantically moving kettles from the burners and calling for all hand on the floor, we finally arrested the viscous liquid that was swamping the kitchen. It looked like a scene from "I Love Lucy" for a while. Thankfully, no one was injured, no appliances were damaged and I didn't get a reprimand from the Superintendent.

The upside was, the students were the best in stepping up and maintaining a terrific sense of humor through the whole mess. Each class member earned an A+ for the project and had enough jelly to take a jar home. They also had a nutty story to share with future generations about their experience. I never did hear if any of them continued making jelly.

This recipe comes from Robin Smith of Whitehall.

Chokecherry Jelly

3 c. chokecherry juice
½ c. lemon juice

1 package pectin
4 ½ c. sugar

Grind berries and add enough hot water to pulp to make a thick soupy mash. Strain through a cheesecloth; don't squeeze. Let it drain on its own for a day or so. Take the berry juice, lemon juice and pectin, mix well and bring to a boil. Add sugar and boil for 2 minutes. Pour into sterilized jars and seal with hot lids. Process in boiling water bath for 5 minutes. Yield: approximately seven ½ pints.

pear to be earned in a country with a lower tax rate."

At the heart of this Koch Brothers/Business Roundtable/Chamber of Commerce national campaign for corporate tax cuts is the lie POTUS used in his speech: US corporations pay a 35 percent tax rate, "a rate far higher than any foreign competitors." That lie ignores the loopholes and special tax breaks corporate lobbyists have bribed Congress to adopt.

A 2016 Government Accountability Office study examined the effective tax rate paid by large profitable American corporations from 2008 through 2012. The study found US corporations were paying an effective tax rate of just 14%. A fifth of these corporations paid no federal income tax in 2012.

Lastly, the POTUS proposals reduce Trump's business tax rate from 39% to 15%. The estate tax paid by heirs receiving $12 million or more is abolished.

Brighten Your Grandchildren's Financial Future

Mother's Day and Father's Day may get more attention, but National Grandparents Day, observed on Sept. 10, has gained in popularity. If you're a grandparent, you might expect to receive some nice cards, but if you want to make the day especially meaningful, you may want to consider giving some long-lasting financial gifts to your grandchildren.

What might come to mind first, of course, is helping your grandchildren pay for college. You can choose from several college savings vehicles, but you may be especially interested in a 529 savings plan. With a 529 plan, your earnings accumulate tax free, provided they are used for qualified higher education expenses, such as tuition, books, and room and board. (Keep in mind that 529 plan distributions not used for qualified expenses may be subject to federal and state income taxes and a 10% IRS penalty on the earnings.) You may be eligible for a state income tax incentive for contributing to a 529 plan. Check with your tax advisor regarding these incentives, as well as all tax-related issues pertaining to 529 plans.

One benefit of using a 529 plan is contribution limits are quite generous. Plus, a 529 plan is flexible: If your grandchild decides against college, you can transfer the plan to another beneficiary.

Generally, a 529 plan owned by a grandparent won't be reported as an asset on the Free Application For Federal Student Aid (FAFSA), but withdrawals from the plan are treated as untaxed income to the beneficiary (i.e., your grandchild) — and that has a big impact on financial aid, a much bigger impact than if the plan was listed as a parental asset. Beginning with the 2017-2018 academic year, however, FAFSA now requires families to report income from two years before the school year starts, rather than income from the prior calendar year. Consequently, it might be beneficial, from a financial aid standpoint, for you, as a grandparent, to start paying for college expenses from a 529 plan in the year in which your grandchild becomes a junior. Contact a financial aid professional about the potential financial aid impact of any gifts you're considering.

A 529 plan isn't the only financial gift you could give to your grandchildren. You might also consider giving them shares of stock, possibly held in a custodial account, usually known as an UTMA or UGMA account. One possible drawback: You only control a custodial account until your grandchildren reach the age of majority, at which time they can use the money for whatever they want, whereas distributions from a 529 savings plan must be used for qualified higher education expenses.

Still, your grandchildren might be particularly interested in owning the stocks contained in the custodial account — most young people enjoy owning shares of companies that make familiar products. And to further interest your grandchildren in a lifetime of investing, you may want to show them how a particular stock you've owned for decades has grown over time. Naturally, you'll also want to let them know that stocks can move up and down in the short term, and there are no guarantees of profits — but the long-term growth potential of stocks is still a compelling story.

You'd probably do whatever you could for your grandchildren — and with a smart financial gift, you can make a big difference in their lives.

deal with every week. It is obvious to me that the planning is especially important when it comes to a hectic life. Handling them is still a work in progress, but I will share some of the tools I find valuable.

It is All in the Planning!

The battle with maintaining a healthy weight is one I have fought for the past twenty years. If I had to name one thing that trips me up worse than any other, I would say it is lack of planning. My spur-of-the minute decisions, made by my hunger rather than my rational mind, have a way of sabotaging me in the worst way.

Ideally, we take a day of the week (Sunday seems to work well for many), sit down with all household members, and plan menus for the week, plan healthy snacks, then go to the grocery store(s) and shop accordingly. We may do some prepping or extra cooking so that the planned meals come off smoothly and with little effort. We plan meals that are balanced, including fruits and vegetables, reasonable number of calories, as well as delicious and made from scratch.

Now we come back to reality and our not-so-perfect world. We are late home from work. Last-minute errands arise. We don't have time for a proper lunch and reason goes out the window. Our children or grand-children have games or need us in other capacities. We go out to eat with no plan, so we "see what looks good when we get there". These are the types of scenarios that I

For day-time snacks, and/or no time for lunch, it is important to have non-perishable options around that will suffice when there is no time for a chicken or tuna salad or other healthy choices. I stock low-sodium, vegetable-packed canned soups that can be heated on a moment's notice and whole-grain crackers and cheese. Peanut or almond butter is good with crackers or an apple or celery. Hummus and whole-grain pitas or raw vegetables can be prepared quickly and keep hunger at bay. Nuts are handy and easy to munch on even while doing other tasks.

At dinner time, I rely on whole, fresh fruit and raw vegetables when prep time is limited. It is best when there are left-overs or frozen home-made dishes that can be heated up in a hurry. If they are not available, I love the bagged salads that come with dressing, cheese, seeds or nuts, etc. I can make the salad in minutes and I add fish, chicken or meat for a balanced meal.

When eating out, I have learned what dinner salads are available at the restaurants we frequent and plan ahead so I am prepared to order one rather than look at the menu and wing it when I get there.

If I am tired of salads, I order a main dish of lean beef, chicken or fish with vegetables and the salad with dressing on the side.

Your planning may look totally different than mine and you will plan for your lifestyle. It is important not to go too long without eating and to keep snacks healthy and low in calories. Eating breakfast early helps, as does planning and sticking to the meals that are scheduled. Emergency supplies for last-minute meals and snacks also keep us on our path to healthier living. Make sure your strategy includes foods you enjoy, not just those you think you should be eating!

Vitamin K an essential part of overall health

By Judith Duryea

If you're one of the few people on the planet who hasn't been asking about Vitamin K lately, here's the story: it's very important for more than blood clotting. It supports bone and cardiovascular health, blood sugar, brain function, and more. For years, all we ever heard what that it was to be avoided by people on blood thinners, but there is so much more to this vitamin.

First, Vitamin K is not a simple, single vitamin. What is known generally as Vitamin K is really a group of structurally similar, fat-soluble vitamins, usually known as Vitamin K1 and K2. (Vitamin K3 is synthetic and has shown toxicity). Vitamin K1, also known as phylloquinone, is synthesized by plants and is found in highest amounts in dark green vegetables like broccoli and spinach as well as fruits like kiwi and avocados.

K2, which goes by the name menaquinone, comes from healthy bacteria in the human gut as well as from some foods, mostly grassfed meat and dairy products as well as fermented food like tempeh, sauerkraut, fermented cheeses and organ meats. K2 has several subtypes, one of which is involved in bone metabolism. Menaquinones are homologs of Vitamin K2 and are abbreviated MK-n where n represents the number of side chain residues. This is why some customers are asking for Vitamin K with MK4 or MK7, but these two are subtypes of Vitamin K2.

Vitamin K was discovered in 1929 when a Danish scientist was investigating the role of cholesterol by feeding chickens a cholesterol-depleted diet. After several weeks, they began hemorrhaging. Their health could not be restored by adding only cholesterol back into the diet and it appeared that something else in addition to cholesterol had been extracted from the food. This compound was called the coagulation vitamin; it received the letter K because the German journal that reported it called it Koagulationsvitamin.

According to most research, average diets are usually not lacking in vitamin K1, but people with liver damage or disease, like alcoholism, cystic fibrosis, or inflammatory bowel diseases or recent abdominal surgeries might be deficient.

Also, people on stringent diets or those taking anticoagulants may suffer from low vitamin K levels. Symptoms of vitamin K1 deficiency include anemia, bruising and bleeding of the gums or nose and heavy menstrual bleeding in women.

Osteoporosis and coronary heart disease are strongly associated with lower levels of vitamin K2. Menaquinone is not inhibited by Salicylates as happens with K1, so K2 supplementation can alleviate the chronic vitamin K deficiency caused by long-term aspirin use. Some sources think that our dietary intake of K2 has been obliterated due to modern agriculture. Rarely are cows grass fed, but instead are fed feedlot grain and other feed that excludes the green grass. We no longer get K2 in butterfat or the organs and fat of animals grazing on grass.

Vitamin K2 (MK4) has been shown to reduce bone fracture risk, stop and reverse bone loss and in Japan it is recognized as a treatment for osteoporosis. It supports healthy aging, keeps our brains functioning healthfully, and has significant coagulation and blood-clotting abilities. It keeps calcium where it belongs in the body, so supports cardiovascular health by moving excess arterial calcium into bone tissue where it belongs and is needed, while removing it from the arteries where it doesn't belong.

Vitamin K encourages healthy blood sugar levels by supporting healthy systemic inflammation levels, which in turn benefits the body's use of insulin. A recent study showed that the K2 form of MK-7 increases the percentage of the protein in bones that is used as a marker for the bone formation process three times more than vitamin K1 does.

There is a connection between healthy intestinal bacteria and assimilation of K2, so it's important to make sure this bacteria is sufficient. For example, if you have taken antibiotics, or if your absorption of nutrients is compromised by disease, supplement with a probiotic regularly.

While we need vitamin K for bone, brain, skin and even prostate health, and there is no known toxicity with high doses of the vitamin, be aware that it blocks the blood-thinning action of anticoagulants such as warfarin. Overall, though, vitamin K is a beneficial addition to our wellness program.

Fire danger mars beginning of upland bird hunting season

By Paul Vang

It was the first day of September, but with summer heat and smoke from wildfires, it didn't seem much like hunting season.

Still, it had been a long time since January when my black Labrador retriever, Kiri, and I had taken our last walk across a frozen field in search of ducks, and it was time to pack a lunch and head to the hills in search of grouse.

While there was a forecast for high temperatures of around 90° in the afternoon, the morning was still cool when we took our first walk across a mountain hillside in search of blue grouse, or dusky grouse if we want to be scientifically correct.

Walking around on the hillside didn't feel right this time. In fact, walking around through the dry, crispy grass and low brush made me feel kind of nervous. While we've been mostly spared from wildfires in and around Butte, it seemed obvious that it wouldn't take much of a spark to start a fire. In fact, a rock rolling downhill and hitting another rock might be enough to cause a spark that would start that conflagration.

In any event, after an hour's walk we circled back to our starting place at the top of the hill where we had driven up a rutted two-track trail. Another vehicle had pulled into the turn-around and I had a chat with two other grouse hunters, commiserating about the hot weather and drought.

As for blue grouse, one of the guys pointed to a much higher ridgeline above us and said, "There should be some blues up there."

"Yes, could be," I responded, "but you've got to walk up there." He agreed, "Yeah, there is that."

After a cordial chat we agreed on walking routes where we could hike without getting into each other's way, and Kiri and I took off, this time down a long aspen draw.

Happily, things aren't quite as dry in the aspens as they are on the mountain ridges. On the other hand, at the beginning of September all the trees and shrubberies still have their leaves and visibility in the quakies is quite limited. As it worked, however, Kiri didn't pick up any bird scent and I wasn't frustrated by the sound of a grouse flushing out of sight. Trust me, I know all too well what that sounds like.

The highlight, or perhaps the lowlight of this walk, was finding a seemingly open spot to cross the bottom of the draw to walk back up the hill on the other side.

I found myself in a boggy spot where fallen trees boxed me in and

I couldn't get over the trees. I finally found a spot where I could crawl under a tree and emerged on the other side covered with mud.

Of course, by the time we walked out of the trees into midday heat, I was mostly dried off.

And that, sorry to report, was the opening of the 2017 hunting season for Kiri and me. We didn't see anything, scent anything, and I never fired a shot. On the bright side, however, is the knowledge that things should get better in future hunts.

That mindset of optimism is, of course, what keeps us going back to the mountains and aspen thickets.

The memories of past hunts when things click and we get shots at grouse and sometimes connect and come home with the makings of a gourmet dinner is what keeps upland hunters going through those long months of the off season. It keeps the wheels of commerce grinding as we submit to the lust for fancy shotguns, buy and feed bird dogs, put gas into gas-guzzling trucks and SUVs, and all the other expenses that we try not to think about.

On the other hand, I have decided that until we get some rain and cooler weather, I'm going to go fishing. Standing in the middle of a trout stream, even if the water level is low, I won't have to worry about accidentally sparking a wildfire.

Carousel Corner

By Larry Hoffman

The first annual Carousel Cruise last Saturday was a great success. 89 vintage cars were spread out on the lawn of Stodden Park, with 30 participating in the poker run through town. Cars were there from Missoula, Bozeman, and Helena, as well as here.

The Carousel building was open for folks to get a look at how far we've come and what remains to be done. Several of the carved horses got their first look at their new home and hundreds of people admired their craftsmanship. Nondys Wright, who has done all the painting, was there to see her art appreciated. It was also an opportunity for people to see the progress on the new aquatic facility, parking around the piles of dirt and gravel waiting to be placed back around the new construction.

The front door of our building is still just a plywood sheet until we are ready to install the beautiful doors donated by one of our biggest supporters, but Tillo Graphics got the big red "CAROUSEL" letters installed during the week in time for the event. J. P. Gallagher's Parks and Recreation crew put up barriers to guide people onto the sidewalk through the Carousel and pool construction zones. Our landscaping front and back is pretty raw, since all of it will be done later as part of the Stodden Park Improvement Plan.

It was a shortened week with Labor Day. We didn't have our regular Monday afternoon work session, but Tuesday saw several people, including a couple of Tech mining students, show up to get the place cleaned up and organized for the Cruise.

Randy Clayton and Sonya Rosenthal were busy on the phone searching for people to get the walls and ceiling done, with some success. Bob Bishop was there Friday to start mudding

This Week In Labor History September 13th - September 19th

*"The great corporation which employed you lied to you, and lied to the whole country—from top to bottom it was nothing but one gigantic lie."
-Upton Sinclair, The Jungle*

Wednesday, Sept 13:

Butte Montana: A crackdown by local authorities and federal troops prevents a call for a general strike to protest the conviction of I.W.W. Union leaders. Omar Bradley leads federal troops to shut down The Daily Bulletin. I.W.W. Union members in Butte and Anaconda are arrested, without cause including William F. Dunne, editor of The Daily Bulletin. -1918

3 more unarmed striking workers are murdered in Woonsocket (Rhode Island) while fighting for a minimum wage for textile workers. Over the course of September, more than 420,000 workers join the strike. -1934

Thursday, Sept 14:

Legendary Labor leader and IWW co-founder Eugene Debs is sentenced to 10 years in prison for speaking out publicly against entry into WWI. He ran for the U.S. presidency as a Socialist in 1920 from his prison cell and won over one million votes. -1918

An unarmed striker is shot by a bog owner (and town-elected official) during a peaceful walkout by 1,500 cranberry pickers, members of the newly-formed Cape Cod Cranberry Pickers Union Local 1. State police were called to protect profits and low wages, more strikers were shot and 64 were arrested. The strike was lost. -1933

Friday, Sept 15:

Over 5,000 female cotton workers, in and around Pittsburgh, strike for a 10-hour day. The male trade Unionists become the first male auxiliary when they gather to protect the women from police attacks. The strike ultimately failed. -1845 Calvin Coolidge, then governor of Massachusetts, called out the Massachusetts National Guard to break a strike of Boston police officers who were striking for Union recognition, vacation time and better pay. Invoking the "American Plan" (an agreement between the Government and Business to suppress all Unions) and fired all striking Police. His action won him acclaim and swept him onto the Republican ticket as the vice presidential nominee. -1919

Saturday, Sept 16:

43,000 oil workers went on strike in 20 states, immediately after World War II ended. The end of the war saw a wave of strikes across the country, as workers who had patriotically sacrificed all resistance to workplace injustices during the war no longer had any excuses not to fight for decent pay and benefits. Soon after the oil workers walked off the job, 200,000 coal miners, 4,000 NW lumber workers, 70,000 Midwest truck drivers, and 40,000 machinists in San Francisco and Oakland joined them. East coast longshoremens and New England textile workers also struck. -1945 The Farm Labor Organizing Committee wins a signed contract with the Mount Olive Pickle Co. and growers, ending a 5-year boycott. The agreement marked the first time an American labor Union represented guest workers. -2004

Sunday, Sept 17:

Butte Montana: The Great Strike of 1934 ends after 4 months in a major Union victory. The Anaconda Company grants the striking Union miners a wage increase, a 40 hour work week and full recognition. -1934 United Mine Workers of America members and a minister occupy the Pittston Coal Company's plant in Carbon, Va., beginning a year-long strike. Among other issues: management demands for drastic limitations in health and pension benefits for retired and disabled miners and their dependents and beneficiaries. -1989

Monday, Sept 18:

A 20-month illegal lockout of 2,900 Steelworkers members at Kaiser Aluminum plants in three states ends when an arbitrator orders a new contract. Kaiser was forced to fire scabs and fork over tens of millions of dollars in back pay to Union members. -1999 One week after the September 11, 2001, attacks, anthrax spores are mailed by an unknown party. 5 people exposed to the spores died, including 2 workers at Washington, D.C.'s USPS facility: APWU Union members Thomas Morris Jr. and Joseph Curseen, died within the month. -2001

Tuesday, Sept 19:

Boston policemen declare a work stoppage due to their thwarted attempts to affiliate with the American Federation of Labor (AFL). Massachusetts Governor Calvin Coolidge puts down the strike by calling out the entire state militia. -1919 John L. Lewis calls a strike of 480,000 US soft-coal miners. -1949 Over 500,000 Union members converge on Washington D.C., for a Solidarity Day march and rally protesting Republican policies that shifted all power and wealth to the rich at the expense of the working class. The Unions warned that the new breed of Corporate Republicans, if not stopped, would destroy the middle class by off-shoring U.S. Manufacturing and jobs, gutting Unions, giving corporate subsidies, cutting taxes only for the rich, and using "trickle down" "Free Market" economics. -1981 and taping, and several others thought they might find the time to help. This part of the project has disappointingly dragged out for months and we need all the help we can get to finish it so we can get on with the finish details.

The work on the mechanism has stalled out as well, since the next step involves installing the sweeps, radiating arms that support the full diameter of the carousel. That will take up a lot of floor space now filled with construction materials until the interior surfaces are finished.

by volunteers who were working on the high school with Halvorson and church members. The cornerstone was placed on Sunday, September 26, 1937. The interior was completed in February 1939, when the first services there were held.

The Parish Educational and Fellowship building was added to the church in 1957. According to church records, a fundraising drive was started in October 1956 and in June 1957, Hammond-Everly Engineering Company of Butte was given the building contract. The bid was $43,720. Artist A. Rudy Autio was commissioned to design, execute and supervise the installation of a 16-foot by 17-foot work, "Jesus and the Children" as the finishing touch and focal point of the building.

Throughout the years, the church has served not only through its ministry, Graving and Quist said, but as a social outlet and gathering place for its congregation and the community. In its early days, the church served as a place where parishioners could speak Norwegian and maintain their traditions. The Ladies Aid Society and later women's circles of the church played a great role in fundraising as well as socialization for the church, organizing bake sales, garage sales and dinners.

Gold Hill will celebrate its 125th anniversary with a dinner for members on Sunday, Sept. 16 at the Fellowship Hall.

The Butte-Silver Bow Public Library's Nerd Herd offers technology help for seniors the first Thursday of each month from 10 a.m.-Noon at the Belmont Senior Center, 615 E. Mercury. For more information, call 723-3361 or visit www.buttepubliclibrary.info.
The Butte-Silver Bow Public Library is seeking submissions for the 2018 Fundraising Calendar. Entries should be digital copies of any medium that portray Butte past or present. An image will be chosen for each month plus a cover image. Copies of the calendar will be sold through the library at our branches and various events around town for the purpose of raising funds for the library collections, events, and facilities. Contributors will get full credit for any submitted artwork. Submissions are due by October 1st, 2017. Calendars will be printed and available for sale during November and December. All submission will be displayed in the Carle Gallery throughout January 2018. Submissions should be delivered electronically either by email or flash drive. For more information, please visit the website at www.buttepubliclibrary.info or contact Shari Curtis at 406-723-3361 or email at scurtis@buttepubliclibrary.info
