URA board approves loan, grants for several projects

By Robin Jordan

Butte-Silver Bow's Urban Revitalization Agency board approved a loan and a matching grant for one business and matching grants for several other projects at its monthly meeting last week.

The URA board approved a loan of up to $100,000 to Shelly Conner of Gloss: The Green Beauty Counter to purchase the building at 31 W. Park, formerly the location of Flawless Salon and Medical Spa. The loan is for 20 years at a 5 percent fixed rate and includes fees. The loan is conditional on the approval of another loan from the Butte Local Development Corporation.

The board also approved a matching grant to Conner for redevelopment of the building, including electrical and plumbing upgrades. Conner said the upgrades are needed to meet state barber and cosmetologist specifications. Total cost of the upgrades is $6,310 and the grant is for up to $1,580, or 25 percent of eligible costs, according to URA guidelines.

Conner said she expects the new business will open in 6 weeks.

The board approved a matching grant to Peggy Guccione of Partners in Preservation for insulation upgrades for the building at 229 N. Montana. Originally built in 1920 as the First Church of Christ Scientist, the building is currently leased to Harvest Church, Guccione told the board members. Despite upgrades to the heating system, she said, the building's monthly heating bills are still between $400 and $500 a month, and she had planned some time ago to insulate the attic for energy efficiency.

Guccione said the church originally planned to install high-tech equipment needed for audio/visual presentations in the attic, so she postponed the insulation project. Now, the church has decided the attic equipment is not needed, so Guccione contacted her contractor, who gave her the same quote for the work as before.

Total cost of the project is $7,753 and the board approved a matching grant of up to $1,939, or 25 percent of eligible costs, according to URA guidelines.

The board approved two retroactive requests for matching grants for projects already completed, which members noted was not standard URA process, but was warranted by special circumstances.

The first grant was for roof work at Insty Prints, 120 W. Park St. URA Director Karen Byrnes explained that the owners of Insty Prints had originally received a grant for a painting project and emailed her about using the money to repair the roof instead, but due to an error in the email address, Byrnes never received the message. Water was leaking into the business and the owners assumed that since they hadn't heard from Byrnes, it was okay to use the previous grant to fix the roof.

The Southwest Montana Central Labor Council held its annual Labor Day Picnic at Father Sheehan Park on Monday, which featured lots of food and drinks and kids' games, provided by the YMCA.

Byrnes said if she had received the email, she would have advised the owners to apply for a separate grant for the roof, but because it was an honest mistake and she now had the original email and other paperwork on the project, she was asking the board to approve the roof repair grant retroactively.

The board agreed to approve a grant of $2,224, 25 percent of the total cost of $8,896, for the project.

The board also approved a retroactive request for a matching grant to Horsepower Holdings, LLC at 745 S. Colorado. Justin Joyner, the owner, had received a previous URA grant in January 2018 for plumbing, heating and electrical upgrades to the house. Joyner told the board that a broken curb stop had to be replaced to bring water service to the house. The board retroactively approved a grant of $332, 25 percent of the actual cost of $1,325 under URA guidelines. The board noted that replacing the curb stop was an emergency and it was not usual policy to grant funds for work already completed.

In other business, Byrnes said contractors are still finishing final work on the new parking garage on Park Street. Surveillance cameras have been installed, she said, and the kiosk for purchasing hourly parking permits is working well. She said 110 monthly parking permits have been purchased at $40 per month, more than had been expected.

Byrnes said the railing for the top level of the building on the Galena Street side is still being designed and will be billed separately from the original building contract because it will be more cost efficient.

She said metal trim to hide a ripple in decorative tile at the front entrance of the garage has been ordered and once it arrives, the URA board will be invited to supervise its installation.

Bill Foley

Ron Richards should have been treated like a Bulldog legend by the boys and girls in the Butte High student section when he refereed that basketball game in 1989.

Richards started on the Bulldogs' offensive and defensive lines when they won back-to-back football state titles in 1967 and 1968. He received first-team All-State recognition on both sides of the ball in 1969.

He went on to be a three-year starter for the Montana Grizzlies, playing on teams that won the Big Sky Conference title two years in a row.

As an assistant coach, Richards was a part of Butte High's 1977 and 1981 state championship teams.

By 1989, Richards was an assistant coach under Bob Green at Montana Tech, where he helped lead the Orediggers to a pair of

BUTTE SPORTS

Student sections shouldn't be run like police states

Frontier Conference championships and a trip to the NAIA national championship game.

After serving as the head coach at South Dakota Tech, Richards also coached a year under Joe Glenn at the University of Montana.

He was a hard-nosed, no-nonsense coach who knew how to win games.

Richards, who also started in basketball for the Bulldogs, was a teacher in the Butte school district, and he was a very good basketball official.

On that night at the Butte Civic Center in 1989, however, the Butte High student section could not care less about Richards' accomplishments. He made a couple of calls that went against the Bulldogs.

In those days, the student section ran the length of the court across from the benches in the lower part of the Civic Center. Students always packed the section, and they were always into the game.

The students were a part of a huge home-court advantage for the Bulldogs and often a headache for the officials — especially officials whose names they knew.

For almost a solid quarter on that night in 1989, the Butte High students chanted in unison, "Richards sucks! Richards sucks! Richards sucks!"

Not a single teacher or school administrator tried to do anything to stop it. They knew they would have been overmatched by the hundreds of students.

Back then, students were never very fearful of the dean when they were outside of school.

If this chant bothered Richards, though, he sure didn't show it. In true professional fashion, he just continued to work the game, knowing that the vocal student section was part of it.

Richards certainly didn't want to stomp on the First Amendment rights of those students. He probably figured they paid for their game passes, so they had the right to heckle.

Nowadays, this is not the case.

The student sections at Butte High—and just about every high school here in "The Land of the Free"—are watched over like the kids are living in North Korea.

If a call goes against their team and the student section chants the word "bull," an army of school administrators will come running in before they can get out the "S" on the next word.

During Butte High's first game, one student was ejected from the game for yelling at one of the players from Kalispell Flathead.

That the Flathead player felt the need to argue with the Butte High students was a sign of good heckling. The student section at Duke University would be proud.

The "Cameron Crazies" of Duke study their opponents, organize and game plan, and they are the best at it. They work hard to get into the heads of the opponents, thus helping their team win.

The "HPER Hooligans" at Montana Tech do the same thing. Tech's students have multiple organized teams of "Hooligans" to make sure that the appropriately inappropriate words are being yelled at players and coaches of the teams playing the Orediggers.

Almost every single word that the "Hooligans" say — and at least most of them don't involve George Carlin's seven words — would get a student ejected from a high school game faster than they can say, "But this is America."

In this litigious world where hurting someone's feelings is the worst thing you can do, the school administrators are going overboard with their censorship of the students.

Sure, administrators certainly find themselves in a tough spot.

If the students hurt a feeling — like they did when a woman threatened to sue because Butte High's students chanted "Spoiled rich kids" at Butte Central a little more than a decade ago — the administrators are blamed.

Even the worst student sections, however, take a back seat to what is said by the "adults" in the crowd every single game.

Just ask an opposing football coach at Naranche Stadium if you don't believe it.

Yet, the non-student fans don't have administrators staring them down in Kim Jong-un fashion the entire game.

Why do students have less of a right to be a jerk than other fans? They pay to get into the games, too.

They are censored and intimidated to the point that they don't go to the games. Then we wonder why a school of more than 1,200 students will only have about 10 students in the student section by the end of the basketball season.

The Butte High student section started to dwindle down in the 1990s. It was nearly dead by the time Butte High's boys' basketball team made an improbable run to the state championship game in 2004.

That led to a resurgence and the birth of the "Civic Center Psychos," and they were a hoot.

They filled most of the lower level of the Civic Center and were a huge part of Butte High basketball's high home winning percentage—boys and girls—between 2004 and 2010.

They were smart, funny and rude. They made every game more fun.

Then the crackdown took its toll, and many students would rather do something else — whether that is playing video games or just simply not wanting to be treated like they were in school when they weren't in school — instead of going to games.

The Butte High student section makes a return once in a while, and it has been great the first two home football games. But it is still way smaller than it was and should be.

Schools all over have the same problem.

Sporting events should be the most fun part about going to high school. But how can these kids have fun when they have disapproving school administrators staring at them?

Administrators need to stand down and let the kids be kids.

If something bad does happen — and it certainly will no matter what — we have professional authorities at the game who can handle it. Treating the students like criminals before they even commit a crime, though, is an unnecessary waste of time.

It is also something that is done in police states, and America is not supposed to be a police state.

Ron Richards could certainly tell you that.

What's Cooking

Caramel Rolls

By Debbie Sorensen

Over twenty years ago, I was preparing to teach part-time Junior and Senior High School, Family and Consumers Sciences, after a hiatus of 20 years. Making it even more interesting was the fact that I had been hired only a week before school began. Things were a mad scramble for sure as planning and preparation kicked into over-drive.

When the first day of school finished, there was a student overload in 1st period study hall and I was asked to teach another foods class. However, there was no budget. Luckily, we had an abundance of late fall produce in our garden along with apples that could be utilized. A family from across the valley donated 400 # of potatoes to the program and we were off to the cookbooks.

I turned to family and friends for their ideas and recipes. One of those dear folks, was Dorothy Gronvold a friend from Daughters of Norway and church here in Butte. She willingly pitched in to help me and encourage the students. This is one of her recipes that we garnered donations for and it was a real hit! I'll continue with another Dorothy tale in weeks to come.

Pull Apart Caramel Rolls

5 cans refrigerator biscuits
1/2 c. vanilla ice cream

1/2 c. brown sugar
1/2 c. margarine

Using a 9"x13" cake pan, grease the bottom of pan. Combine the ice cream, brown sugar and margarine. Pour into pan.

Mix together 1/2 c. white sugar and 1 tsp. cinnamon
Cut biscuits in half and roll in the cinnamon-sugar mixture. Place biscuits side by side, standing up and push them together.

Bake at 375° for 20 minutes. Turn pan upside down on cookie sheet to cool.

Poetry of Ed Lahey subject of Archives presentation

The Butte-Silver Bow Public Archives will continue its Brown Bag Lunch series on Wednesday, September 12, with a presentation and reading by Aaron Parrett introducing a collection of unpublished poems by Ed Lahey. Butte's celebrated poet, Ed Lahey (1936 - 2011), achieved renown as one of Montana's finest poets. His poetry reflects a deep commitment to Butte, to Montana, to the working class, and to an intellectual tradition that reaches back to the ancient Greeks. His books The Blind Horses and Birds of a Feather received much critical acclaim, leading to his Montana Governor's Arts Award in 2008.

Moving On: The Last Poems

of Ed Lahey is published by the Drumlummon Institute. The Institute promotes and publishes art and literature created in Montana and the broader American West. Aaron Parrett, a Butte native, is the president.

The presentation will begin at noon and run about an hour at the Archives, 17 W. Quartz St. Guests are encouraged to bring a sack lunch. Coffee and water will be provided.

Brown Bag Lunches are held the second and fourth Wednesdays of every month. Upcoming lectures will focus on topics of local interest. For more information, contact the Archives at 782-3280.

An amazing example of lightning's power

By Robin Jordan

When walking on forest trails, my husband Dave and I are always conscious of the danger of falling trees. In the spring, we always find new deadfall on familiar trails and keep a sharp eye out for places where more trees could fall.

Usually, spring is the time when we see the most downed trees. During the summer, Forest Service crews clear most of the debris from the trails and by early fall, we usually don't encounter many new downed trees.

However, on a recent trip to a creekside spot, we were reminded of another powerful force in the forest—lightning.

For several years, we've been taking the dogs to a spot along the creek below Maney Lake. It's a somewhat popular camping spot, although sometimes it's used for cattle grazing. We park in a small field just off the main road, where there is a large fire-ring and walk a short distance down to the creek, where the dogs love to splash in the water and explore the tree-lined bank. Sometimes we walk through the trees along the creek to a big, lush field, where Kori, the Boston Terrier, loves a game of Frisbee.

On the most recent trip, however, we were shocked to see that near the parking area, a large, dead tree with two trunks had been hit by lightning. The damage was amazing; the trunks were sheared off about four feet from the ground, leaving jagged shards, and the trees had fallen across the creek. We found chunks of wood scattered for about 50 feet in all directions.

On closer inspection, we could see the trunks had been split and charred along their lengths as the lightning travelled to the ground. Luckily, the area around the creek has been damp all season and nothing else nearby was burned. However, a number of the branches were charred and their cones were blackened.

Most chilling was the discovery that one of the trunks had fallen across a small fire pit near the creek that we had often used to warm up on chilly fall days on our excursions with the dogs. While nobody in their right mind would have been sheltering there during a lightning storm, it gave me an eerie feeling that the tree was lying right where I had often sat.

The tree was just another reminder of the powerful forces in nature and the way the forest changes every time we visit. The creek rises every spring to a rushing torrent and ebbs to a gentle flow in the summer and fall. The deciduous trees and bushes are already showing some fall colors.

Only occasionally do we notice the difference, except when nature unleashes some precipitous event, like a lightning strike. Nevertheless, the changes inevitably go on.

Yes, Capitalists are exploiting cheap American Labor

By George Waring

In mid-July, Josh Bivens at the Economic Policy Institute summarized the latest reports on the state of American Labor. No glad tidings here.

Most importantly, Bivens writes that "unionization and collective bargaining levels are at historic lows not seen since before 1928." Think President Calvin Coolidge. Another contrast, today's federal minimum wage purchases fewer goods and services than it did a half century ago, all the way back to the 1960s and Lyndon Johnson's "War on Poverty."

On the winning side of our widening American Class Divide, a 2017 study revealed that CEO pay had risen from being twenty times greater than typical workers' pay in 1965 to two hundred and seventy-one times greater than their workers last year.

Know this! The gains of our elite CEOs have come at the expense of the vast majority of working families. The latest edition of the Economic Policy Institute's "The State of Working America" reports that from Jimmy Carter in 1979 to George W. Bush in 2007, if the income of the middle fifth of American households had grown at the same rate as overall average household income, it would have been $19,000 higher in 2007 than it actually was. That is, it would have been 27 per cent percent higher than it actually was in 2007.

Why have CEO incomes risen like rockets during this new "gilded age"? Quite simply, corporate CEOs derive their phenomenal incomes from ownership of capital. As was the case during the Age of Calvin Coolidge in the Roaring Twenties, it is today "the children of affluent parents who typically grow up to be affluent, and the children of the poor remain poor." A study published last year confirms the fact that more of the students at elite colleges, such as the Ivy League, come from families in the top 1 percent of the income distribution than from the bottom 50 percent. And state public colleges, which once were the lower-income high school graduates' chance at the American dream, are now being starved for funding by tax cutting Republican governments.

Josh Bivens reports that Trump/Republican federal policy in the last year has worked to further increase income inequality. For instance, Trump's Labor Department abandoned an Obama-era rule that would have expanded automatic eligibility for overtime to 12.5 million workers. Those workers would have been paid time-and-a-half when they worked more than 40 hours in a week.

Of course, the Trump/Republican Tax Cuts and Jobs Act passed in December 2017 distributed 83 percent of its benefits to the top 1 percent.

In August, the Washington Post's Heather Long reported that any wage growth was being wiped out entirely by inflation. "Rising prices have erased U.S. workers' meager wage gains, the latest sign that strong economic growth hasn't translated into greater prosperity for the middle and working classes." The cost of living was up 2.9 percent from July 2017 to July 2018. That "outstripped a 2.7 percent increase in wages over the same period." The average U.S. "real wage," Long reported, "fell to $10.76 an hour in July, 2 cents lower than in 2017."

Stagnant pay isn't mentioned by our Co-Conspirator-in-Chief. He focuses on "an annual economic growth rate of 4 percent in the second quarter of 2018 — the highest rate since mid-2014." Or, he simply lies.

According to Long, "Inflation hit a six-year high this summer, partially because of rising energy costs. In addition, "consumers were paying more for housing, health care and automobile insurance." Additional price increases are coming from Trump's tariff war, boosting prices of cheap imported products sold by Walmart.

Here's an update on that big pay gap between American CEOs and their workers. The Washington Post's Jeff Stein and Jena McGregor in August reported the gap was actually 312 to 1 last year. "The wide gap reflects U.S. laws that unjustly privilege managers over workers. In many European countries, the salary gap between CEOs and their employees is less than half of what it is in the US. The CEO-worker pay ratio is about 94 to 1 in Britain, 91 to 1 in France, 71 to 1 in the Netherlands, and 40 to 1 in Sweden."

According to Cornell University economist Steven Kyle, "European workers have stronger labor unions, which makes a difference. When you have socialists governing, they're going to jump up and down about these things. And, obviously, we don't have that."

Amen.

Consider Financial Gifts for Your Grandchildren

National Grandparents Day is observed on Sept. 9. If you're a grandparent, you may get some gifts or cards – or maybe even a phone call! But you might feel that it's better to give than to receive, especially when it comes to your grandchildren. And you can make a real difference in their lives by making a financial gift for their future.

For starters, think about your grandchildren's education. If college or some type of vocational school is in their future, you may want to help them meet some of the costs, which can be considerable. One common education-savings vehicle is a 529 savings plan. With this plan, earnings on withdrawals are tax free, provided they are used for qualified education expenses. (Keep in mind that 529 savings plan distributions not used for qualified expenses may be subject to ordinary income tax and a 10% IRS penalty on the earnings.) You also may be eligible for a state income tax incentive for contributing to a 529 savings plan. Check with your tax advisor about these incentives, as well as all tax-related issues pertaining to 529 savings plans.

And, as the owner of a 529 plan, you have flexibility in choosing where the money goes – if your grandchild decides against college or another type of advanced education, you can transfer the plan to another beneficiary. And due to recent tax law changes, the scope of 529 plans has been expanded to include qualified withdrawals of up to $10,000 for tuition expenses per year per beneficiary at public, private or religious elementary or secondary schools. Be aware, though, that a 529 savings plan could affect any financial assistance your grandchild might receive. Although a 529 plan owned by a grandparent won't be reported as an asset on the Free Application For Federal Student Aid (FAFSA), withdrawals from the plan are treated as untaxed income to the beneficiary (i.e., your grandchild) — and that has a big impact on financial aid. So, you may want to contact a financial aid professional about the potential effects of any gifts you're considering.

A 529 savings plan isn't the only financial gift you could give to your grandchildren. You also might consider giving them shares of stock, possibly held in a custodial account, usually known as an UTMA or UGMA account. However, you only control a custodial account until your grandchildren reach the age of majority as defined by state law, at which time they take it over. They then can use the money for whatever they want – and their plans may not have anything to do with books or classes.

Still, your grandchildren might be particularly interested in owning the stocks contained in the custodial account – many young people enjoy owning shares of companies that make familiar products. And your gift may even get your grandchildren interested in long-term investing.

No matter what type of financial gifts you give to your grandchildren, make sure you keep enough money to pay for your own needs. It's important to balance your personal savings needs with your desire to be generous.

Giving financial gifts can be rewarding – to you and your grandchildren. Consider exploring some possibilities soon.

Is Fast Food Good for You?

No matter how often we eat at fast-food restaurants, it is not because we think fast food is good for us. It is more a matter of convenience, price and, even more than likely, cravings. Like other things in life that may not be the best, the more we eat them, the more we want them. And what could be easier than pulling through a drive-through window and exchanging a few dollars for food that is hot, tasty and ready to eat?

Recently, while discussing our Healthy Lifestyle Classes with a man desirous of losing weight and improving his health, he related his experience with fast food. An occasional stop for fast-food for supper had gradually become an every-night habit of swinging by for fast-food for the family. It was affordable, convenient and an easy routine to fall into, but not good for his health.

It is well known that fast-food meals tend to be loaded with calories, fat, sodium and sugar, none of which are beneficial in excess. A greater frequency of eating fast food is linked to insulin resistance, and thus increased risk for Diabetes, as well as depression, heart disease, obesity and other chronic conditions.

If you buy food from a large, national or international chain, it is almost certain to be very processed, and not at all like real food. Someone eating a burger in San Francisco, from say McDonalds, is eating the exact same burger as someone in Boston. The meat in one burger comes from several different cows. Preservatives are generally used so the food can be made or formed in a factory and trucked to its destination.

It is unlikely that any of us are going to avoid fast food entirely. When travelling, there are times that fast food is the only alternative. However, we can all work on frequency and choices. Everything in moderation is a good motto. The first rule in fast food is to eat the regular sized meals and not super-size. A larger number of fries and soda pop added to an already fattening meal is tempting but not nutritional.

Utilizing the calories that are now generally posted on the menus is a good place to start. Rather than ordering the special of the day and thinking of value, add up the calories on the items you are thinking of before ordering. It is easy to eat enough calories for a day in one fast-food meal.

Replacing soda pop with water or unsweetened iced tea will lower the calorie count and choosing an alternative to French fries for a side will make a big difference in the amount of fat consumed. Salads can be a good choice but only if dressing, cheese and croutons are used sparingly.

Cutting down on frequency is another way to avoid the undesirable effects of these processed, high-calorie meals. If you only eat your favorite burger or burrito meal once a month, it will either be a big treat, or it could lose its appeal. Either way, including it less often will be beneficial to your health.

Another alternative is to stop by the grocery store on the way home. Pick up some buns and locally raised burger to make into patties and throw on the grill. A loaf of whole-grain bread and some fresh sandwich fixings is quick and easy. A salad kit added to the mix is an easy way to add vitamins and fiber to the meal.

Eating at locally-owned drive-ins, rather than chains, may also make a difference in freshness and the amount of processing. Ask questions so you know what the best choices are. Order with moderation in mind and you will keep processed foods, fat and calories to a minimum. Make your fast-food choices good!

Spirit of Columbia Gardens Carousel

Summer color splash

Everyone who visits the Spirit of Columbia Gardens Carousel has loads of fun, including the staff and volunteers. It is a real treat for us watching kids smile and gasp in wonder when they walk in the door with their relatives. Of course the main attraction- one could say the jaw dropper- is the carousel itself. The horses spin around alight with a super cool colorful canopy like a rainbow splashing overhead. Sunlight wanders across the southern sky during the day, peeking in the windows and playing tricks on the eye. Sunset shadows bask the children's play area with quiet western shades.

Colors are sources of visual entertainment and "oh boy you betcha" does the Carousel building have the spectrum covered! Floor to ceiling, wall to wall, inside and out; one never finds a place where the eye becomes restless. The prismatic lights of the Carousel itself adds sparkle as it twirls, while all of the 24 rounding board and tower mirrors each catch a subtle color or a piece of the sun. Sometimes the colors are fluids like a stream of ribbons. Sometimes the colors are steadfast like a strong note of music.

Balloons of all hues dance in the wind outside. Their helium ballet is welcoming and humorous; an invitation for all who enter to giggle, tap a toe to the music, let go of worries and cares, and for a time- however short- become a child again. Frosty cool spoonfuls of Ice Cream help such transformation because our 16 Wilcoxson's flavors come in all aspects of the color wheel!

The sky is blue again thankfully. Gray hazes from forest fires have passed allowing a few wisps of cloudy white above. It seems that even mother nature is beckoning all to visit the Carousel and breathe in fresh opportunity and pleasant experience.

The Carousel staff adds bright color to our party packages as well! We have creative people with foremost devotion to our customers along with expertise to decorate your party tables attractively. Your photos will capture these pastel party memories. Your invited guests might darken their lips with licorice ice cream or brighten their teeth with pink bubble gum smiles!

Call us soon at 406 494-7775 and ask about our party packages. Even better, call us and make a reservation that secures your time slot. Visit our Facebook page:

Spirit of Columbia Gardens Carousel. The Facebook page shows our operating hours and if you have the time you could peruse all sorts of photos and videos that chart the fascinating story of this accomplishment for Butte, Montana. You can still become involved by volunteering as we seek mechanical skills, concession staff, woodworkers, artists, video/computer experts, and carousel operators for the dayshift once our current staff goes back to school. Donations are always appreciated given our 501(c)3 status and many folks are making memorials to honor loved ones. We would love to meet folks with fund raising experience to assist our planning for long term growth objectives.

Message from the Mission

Butte Rescue Mission selects general contractor for new campus

The Butte Rescue Mission has chosen Dave Svejkovsky Construction to build its new Center of Hope campus in Butte's warehouse district.

"We are so excited to finally be moving ahead at this capacity on the Center of Hope project," said Rocky Lyons, Executive Director for the Butte Rescue Mission. "I am looking forward to breaking ground and seeing this project come to life!"

The bid total was $678,379.00 for Phase 1 of the $1.5 million project.

Recent projects for Svejkovsky Construction include Canyon Ferry Mini-Basket Fuel Station & Convenience Store, new renovation and remodel of Silver Bow Pizza Parlor, and addition and renovation of Stokes Fresh Foods Market/True Value Hardware.

Besides Svejkovsky, the other general contractors bidding on the project were Best Bid Contracting, Jay Fortune Construction and Markovich Construction.

Phase 1 of the project will begin this week with delivery of the modular housing units from the Bakken oil field, which have been winterized and stored in eastern Montana near Sidney. Until the site's infrastructure is in place, the housing units will be kept on Butte Central's property to the east of the Mission's 1.6 acres on East Platinum Street.

Once the units are in place, they will house 28 men in one unit and 28 women, children and intact families in the other. The men's unit will include a commercial kitchen and dining area. The women's unit will contain a teaching kitchen for home economics and a dining area. Until the existing warehouse's remodeling for Phase 2 is completed, the Mission's administration will also be housed in the women's unit.

Major renovation on the campus' existing warehouse will begin once the modular housing units are open to feed and house the homeless. The warehouse—called "The Taproot," where real growth will come from—will include a 25-seat classroom, health clinic, chapel, laundry, computer lab and administrative offices. It will also provide programs and services to foster transformation from homeless to wholesome.

Mission asks community to match Town Pump $200K donation

In order to get Phase 1 underway, the Butte Rescue Mission needs the Butte community to come forward to secure the Town Pump Charitable Foundation's $200,000 matching grant.

"It is crucial that we meet this match if we want to provide shelter and food to the homeless, hungry and hurting this fall," Lyons said.

Currently, the Mission has $85,000 of the $200,000 needed.

Direct contributions to the Mission's Building Fund may be made to First Montana Bank, 1940 Dewey Blvd., in Butte, or mailed to the Butte Rescue Mission, P.O. Box 3046, Butte, MT 59702. Please mark your donation "Building Fund." The Mission can also take credit card donations over the phone at (406) 782-0925 or online through Pay Pal at our website www.butterescuemission.org.

This Week In Labor History

"In a Fascist system, it's not the lies that count but the muddying. When citizens can't tell real news from fake, they give up their demands for accountability bit by bit."

- Naomi Wolf, author, journalist, political adviser

Wednesday, Sept 5:

Palmer raids and America's first "Red Scare" begins on this date. Federal agents attack Industrial Workers of the World (IWW) Union halls and Union offices in 48 cities across the nation in order to crush America's growing labor movement on behalf of anti-Union "Free Market" Capitalists. The "Red Scare" destroyed the lives of thousands of good Americans and helped greedy corporations increase their profits by falsely associating all Unions with Communism. -1917

General strike begins across U.S. maritime industry, stopping all shipping. The strikers were objecting to the government's post-war National Wage Stabilization Board order that reduced pay increases negotiated by maritime Unions. -1946

Thursday, Sept 6:

One of the worst disasters in the history of U.S. anthracite mining occurred at the Avondale Mine, near Scranton, Pa., when a fire originating from a furnace at the bottom of a 237-foot shaft roared up the shaft, killing 110 miners. -1869

In the mining town of Spring Valley, Illinois, Emma Goldman heads a Labor Day procession, which ends with a meeting in the central market place, a direct violation of the Mayor's denial of authorization to do so. -1899

Friday, Sept 7:

Federal employees win the right to pay into and receive Workers' Compensation insurance coverage. -1916
32nd Emmy Awards: Notable for going ahead despite 51 of the 52 nominated performers boycotting the event in order to honor the picket line of striking members of the Screen Actors Guild. -1980

Saturday, Sept 8:

The bosses give in to the demands of striking Wobblies (IWW) in McKees Rock, Pa. where 11 unarmed workers had been shot and killed by a deputy during the strike. The bosses agreed to safer working conditions, a raise of 15 percent and an end to the "pool system" that gave foremen control over each worker's pay. It was the IWW's biggest victory to date and enrages the nations Capitalists. -1909
Cesar Chavez led farm workers in California on their first grape boycott. The nationwide protest lasted 5 years and ended with the first Union contract for U.S. farm workers outside of Hawaii. In 1966, Chavez's organization officially became the United Farm Workers. -1965

Sunday, Sept 9:

Butte Montana: During the first week under martial law (protecting the Anaconda Company's interest) National Guard troops had removed Butte's democratically elected Socialist Mayor and Sheriff from office and arrested Union leaders. Today the Anaconda Company announces it will no longer recognize any Union and declares Butte an "open shop". The workers were forced to work in the mines for the Capitalists at the end of a bayonet in "the land of the free". -1914

Over 1,000 Boston police strike when 19 Union leaders are fired for organizing activities. The National Guard is called up to restore order and all strikers are fired. -1919

Monday, Sept 10:

Sheriff Deputies slaughter 19 unarmed coal miners striking outside of Hazleton, Pennsylvania. The strikers were fighting for decent wages and safer working conditions in the one of the most brutal industries in the nation. -1897

The Colorado National Guard under Adjutant General Sherman Bell began a series of daily arrests of Union officers and supporters during a strike in the Cripple Creek District. When a Judge held a hearing on writs of habeas corpus General Bell said "Habeas corpus be damned, we'll give 'em post mortems!" -1903

Tuesday, Sept 11:

75,000 coal miners in Pennsylvania, Ohio and West Virginia end a 10-week strike after winning an 8-hour day, semi-monthly pay, and the abolition of overpriced company owned stores, where they had been forced to shop. -1897

3,000 people died when suicide hijackers from Saudi Arabia, financed by Osama bin Laden, crashed planes into the World Trade Center towers, the Pentagon and a Pennsylvania field. Among the dead were 634 Union members including 343 firefighters and paramedics, 23 New York City police officers, and 37 Port Authority police officers who were attempting to save workers trapped on higher floors of the buildings. -2001

Mining industry gives perspective on I-186

By Paul Vang

"I-186 is bad law-making," is how Mike McGivern, vice-president of human resources at Montana Resources of Butte, describes the ballot initiative that voters will be asked to decide this November.

McGivern was speaking at last week's meeting of the Silverbow Kiwanis Club of Butte. Previously, Tom Reed, a spokesman for Trout Unlimited, one of the organizations backing the measure, addressed the club (see Butte Weekly of August 1, 2018).

McGivern presented positions of the Montana Mining Association and a coalition of groups opposed to I-186, a measure that would require that the Montana Department of Environmental Quality must require clear and convincing evidence that new mines would not cause perpetual water pollution problems before issuing a mining permit. Mark Thompson, president of Montana Resources, is the current president of the Montana Mining Association, and Montana Resources has taken a leading role in leading opposition to the initiative.

McGivern asserted, "We see I-186 as the death knell for the mining industry," citing potential stumbling blocks in the mine permitting process.

McGivern acknowledged that past mining processes caused problems, especially the "disaster" caused by Pegasus Gold, the subsidiary of a foreign mining company that had operations at Beal Mountain, between Butte and Anaconda, and the Zortman-Landusky mine in northern Montana. When mining operations ceased, Pegasus declared bankruptcy and left Montana and Federal taxpayers stuck with the bill for remediation.

He points out, "Thirty laws have been passed since 1997 to remedy the situation, and our current water standards are better than Federal standards. The laws we have now are very stringent and the state has enforcement powers to back it up."

He underlined the news release that came out last week about Montana Resources getting close to pumping water from the Berkeley Pit and extracting minerals and going through a cleaning process. "The water that finally gets discharged from the process will be better than our drinking water."

He also said that the wording of I-186 has a lot of problems that would create further litigation. The "clear and convincing evidence" standard in the initiative wording creates a requirement that is difficult to prove. "It's trying to prove a negative," he says, adding that cautious engineers seldom go out on a limb to say that nothing can ever happen, even if the possibility is remote.

McGivern pointed out the importance of the mining industry to Montana's economy, that the mining industry provides 12,305 jobs in Montana, good-paying jobs with benefits, with an annual payroll of $1.154 billion, and annual tax revenues of $42 million.

There are currently three mining projects that are working their way through the permitting process, including the controversial copper mining project near White Sulphur Springs and the Smith River, and McGivern said that I-186 threatens all of them.

While proponents of I-186 say that current mining operations are not affected by the proposal, McGivern foresees that future permit applications would be threatened.

McGivern also said that financial support for I-186 has been mostly coming from out-of-state, especially eastern states. On the other hand, opposition to I-186 comes from not just mining companies, by 54 of Montana's 56 counties, the AFL-CIO, the Montana Chamber of Commerce, and Montana Motor Carriers, among others.

More information on the mining industry's position on the initiative can be found online at <http://stopi186.com>.

Obviously, if you compare positions and claims by the mining industry with those of the backers of the initiative, there's a lot of disagreement. I'll confess that my general inclination tends toward environmental positions, though in reporting on this presentation I hope I was successful in accurately reporting the mining association perspective.

Again, for the positions of the organizations backing I-186, their website is www.yeson186.org.

There are lots of opinions and positions to consider, as well as the many political races that will be decided, but if you want to be heard when it counts, make sure you're registered to vote and then vote on November 6, whether at the polls or voting early with an absentee ballot. Your vote makes a difference.

Paul Vang's book, "Sweeter than Candy, A Hunter's Journal" is available at Books & Books, Cavanaugh's County Celtic, The Bookstore in Dillon, or online at <http://writingoutdoors.com>.

Well, Well, Well

Back to School

Judith Duryea

Every year we say it: "Where did the summer go? I can't believe it's time for school again." Every year I wish for another month of summer, but no matter how much we wish (even for the smoke to go), this is still the time of year when our students, and those of us with students at home, deal with the onslaught of other peoples' germs. Put 30 students (college age or grammar school) in one room, and even if you use hand sanitizer and Kleenex, inevitably people are going to get sick. How can we fortify our children and ourselves, either as parents, when the kids bring the germs home, or as teachers in the middle of the fray, when school starts, and beyond?

Many factors contribute to a compromised immune system, among them stress, lack of good sleep, poor diet, and inattention to hygiene. This means we all need to sleep well, keep a schedule that isn't totally frenetic, eat whole foods, (not fast food and soda on the run), and make sure to keep runny noses, sneezes, and other germ creators private or cleaned up as best we can. Maybe this sounds like obvious information, but in our fast paced world (which starts these days for kids pre-school), we often neglect or overlook the basics, and when we do, our immune systems falter and we get annoyingly sick.

While all these lifestyle improvements are good, for many they are wishful thinking. If you can't get your kids to sleep at a reasonable hour, can't get them to eat clean protein and vegetables, drink water, and avoid sugar and fat, maybe you can get them to take a nutritional supplement that might help their overall health. And I don't mean Flinstones. Read the labels on kids' vitamins that you purchase at any grocery store and educate yourself about the additives, colorings, artificial sweeteners, etc. These are ingredients you do not need in any supplement, or food for that matter, that you consume in an attempt to be healthy. Look for natural, food based vitamins for your kids and yourself.

Thankfully, more parents are supplementing their children's diets with multivitamins, cold and flu prevention, fish oil, essential fatty acids, calcium and basic vitamins like C and D. Especially when you know your child isn't getting their nutrients from a whole foods diet, like when a child is a fussy eater and will eat only macaroni and cheese, or has food sensitivities that restrict the diet, supplementing makes sense.

Children need nutrients that help their muscles and bones grow and keep their immunity strong. They need supplements without additives, artificial flavors or colors, and sometimes without gluten, yeast, milk derivatives, or animal gelatin. The natural supplement industry provides good tasting, safe vitamins for children from infancy in liquid form, and also chewable (gummies and tablets) and liquids for children from the age of 2 and older.

If your child attends a day care center and is constantly getting illnesses that pass from child to child, consider boosting her immunity with a natural probiotic. The gut is the storehouse of the basis of a strong immune system, with all the good bacteria we need not only to digest our foods, but also to kill invading bacteria. In addition to a probiotic, your child may need vitamin C in combination with herbs that boost the immune system, like Echinacea or elderberry, also an anti-viral.

School age children also trade germs on a daily basis, and probiotics, elderberry, zinc, vitamin C, and additional Vitamin D can help keep their immune system strong. Because Vitamin D is now recognized as part of a strong immunity, it comes in great tasting chewable gummies and pearls, perfect for young children, and liquid form for smaller children.

Essential Fatty Acids (EFAs) also boost the immune system and have been linked to healthy brain development. Two most important EFAs are the Omega 3 fatty acids, EPA and DHA which cannot be made by the body, so have to be taken either in food or supplement form. These two are crucial building blocks of child development and play important roles in every aspect of health from hormone regulation to brain development. Again, these are available for infants and young children and can be shared by parents who like eating good tasting vitamins.

If you are questioning how to boost your child's, or your, resistance to school-borne illnesses, utilize natural supplements. They will keep all of us healthier as we go through the school year and beyond.
